MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

1770. Grant of control of land—Not included in demise—Shown on plan referred to in lease.]—A dwelling-house, with grounds & ornamental water, were demised together, with the control of a plantation, which was on the opposite side of the ornamental water, & belonged to the lessor, but was not demised to the lessee, for the purpose of preventing trespassers thereon, but so as not to interfere with the persons employed by the lessor, his heirs, or assigns. The lease referred to a plan on which the plantation was represented:—Held: on the construction of the lease as explained by the plan, the lessor was not at liberty during the term to destroy the plantation, & an injunction was granted to restrain him from so doing.—*NICHOLSON v. 1772. ———.]—In 1728 land was let on a building lease which expired at Lady Day 1824. In 1819, pltf., by virtue of a demise from an underlessee which expired in 1820 was in possession of a house erected on part of this land & under that demise, exercised, as all his predecessors had done, for more than thirty years, a right of way over a passage on one side of his house, as necessary for the use & enjoyment thereof; particularly for repairing the eastern side: the underlessee's interest expired in 1822. Deft. was in possession of the soil of the passage by virtue of an assignment, in 1791 of the lease of 1728: in 1819 the party possessed of the reversion expectant on the lease of 1728 demised to pltf. the house of which he was in possession, as above, for fifty-seven years & a half to hold from Lady Day, 1824, together with all the appurtenances to the same belonging, subject to a covenant for repairs. In 1822 the reversioner demised the soil of the passage to deft. for sixty-one years, to hold from Lady Day 1824:—Held: under the demise of 1819 pltf. was entitled to a right of way over deft.'s passage.

There are strong authorities in the law books to show these words capable of a wider interpretation & of carrying more than is an appurtenant in the strictly legal sense of that word, where such interpretation is necessary in order to give that word some operation (TINDAL, C.J.).—HINCHLIFFE v. SUB-SECT. 3.—PARTICULAR WORDS OF DESCRIPTION.

A. House or Message.

1778. House—Fascia on wall of adjoining house.]—Pltf. was lessee of a house numbered 152 in A. Street, but which lay behind Nos. 151 & 153 in that street, & at the bottom of a ct. approached by a passage from A. Street, half of which passage was under the first floor of No. 151, & the other half under the first floor of No. 153. The passage was closed by a gate in the plane of the front of 151 & 153, which was hung on the wall of 153, but was admitted to be part of pltf.'s premises. All three houses belonged to the same landlord. Above the gate was a fascia of cement eight feet long, half of which was on the wall of 151, & the other half on that of 153. The fascia had existed from about 1845, & the number of pltf.'s house & the name & business of the occupier for the time being had always been painted on it. No. 153 was demised to deft. in 1874 without any express reservation of the fascia, & pltf. became lessee of No. 152 in 1876:—Held: the fascia must be held to be a parcel of the property demised to pltf., & he was entitled to prevent deft. from interfering with it.—FRANCIS v. HAYWARD (1882), 22 Ch. D. 177; 52 L. J. Ch. 291; 48 L. T. 297; 47 J. P. 517; 31 W. R. 488, C. A.

1779. ——— Part of house demised to tenant of adjoining house—Whether staircase included.]—Deft., the lessee of a house A., took a lease from pltf. of the second & third floors of the adjoining house B., & an opening in the wall between the two houses was made, the staircase down from the second floor of house B. being shut off by a partition. Before this lease had come to an end the assignees of the reversion of the lease of house A., took possession & closed up the opening between the two houses:—Held: pltf. was not then bound to allow deft. the use of the staircase.—CHAPPELL v. MASON (1894), 10 T. L. R. 404, C. A.

1780. Upper floor of house—Outer walls included.]—Where the owner of a building let the upper floor on a representation that the tenant should have the use of the outer walls for advertising purposes:—Held: the tenant had a right to the use of the outer walls so far as appropriate, & the landlord could not derogate from his own grant by putting up a sign outside the walls of the floor included in the letting.—CARLISLE CAFÉ CO. v. MUSE BROTHERS & CO. (1897), 67 L. J. Ch. 53; 77 L. T. 515; 46 W. R. 107; 42 Sol. Jo. 67.

1781. ———.]—The demise of a floor or a room or an office bounded in part by an outside wall primâ facie includes both sides of that wall, unless there be an exception or a reservation or something in the context to exclude it.

Pltfs. demised an office situate on the first floor of pltfs.' leasehold premises to defts., who covenanted (inter alia) to keep the inside parts of the office in good & substantial repair. Pltfs. covenanted to keep in repair the external parts of the demised premises & to permit defts. to affix their trade signs, to be approved by pltfs., on the outside of that portion of the building in their occupation, & subject to this latter covenant, defts. covenanted not without first obtaining the written consent of pltfs. to attach or affix any sign, nameplate, or letters to the premises, & to remove all outside names & trade signs at the determination of the tenancy & to make good all damage caused to the outside walls of the building thereby. By the lease under which pltfs. themselves held they were bound to repair & maintain the walls of the building.

Defts., without obtaining the consent of pltfs., affixed flower boxes outside the three windows of their office. In an action by pltfs. to restrain this alleged trespass:—Held: there was nothing in defts.' lease to exclude the operation of the general rule, the demise included the outside of the outer wall of the office; & pltfs. were not entitled to an injunction.—HOPE BROTHERS, LTD. v. COWAN, [1913] 2 Ch. 312; 82 L. J. Ch. 439; 108 L. T. 945; 29 T. L. R. 520; 57 Sol. Jo. 559.

1782. ———.]—A demise in writing of the "rooms situate on the first & second floors" of business premises:—Held: in the absence of context to the contrary, to include the external walls of the two floors.—GOLDFOOT v. WELCH, [1914] 1 Ch. 213; 83 L. J. Ch. 360; 109 L. T. 820. Annotation:—Reid. Phelps v. London Corpn., [1916] 2 Ch. 255.

1783. Message—Whether equivalent to dwelling-house.—In an action on the case, pltf. declared that he was possessed of a message & premises, with the appurtenances; the plea traversed this allegation, & at the trial it appeared that pltf. had the separate use & occupation of only one floor of a dwelling-house:—Held: the evidence did not negative the allegation that the plaintiff was possessed of a message.

Although the word message may import more than the word dwelling-house, it does not necessarily happen that it must do so (TINDAL, C.J.).—PENN v. GRAFTON (1836), 2 Bing. N. C. 617; 2 Hodg. 58; 3 Scott, 56; 132 E. R. 238.

B. Land and Building.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), ss. 62 (1), (2), 205 (1) (ix.).

1784. General rule—Demise of surface includes all above & all below.—A. was the owner of two houses, & demised one to C. He afterwards found a subterranean chamber extending under both houses. He converted this into a cellar for his own use. He then mortgaged both houses to E. & G. with power of sale. Default was made, & the mtgees. sold. C. bought the house leased to him, described as being in "his occupation," & opened a way into the cellar, & partitioned off so much as was under his house. The mtgees. denied his right, but he refused completion unless he had this part of the cellar, as being in his occupation under his lease. The mtgees. filed a claim for specific performance; but the ct. dismissed it, holding that occupation under a lease means occupation of all that passes under the lease, whether in actual enjoyment or not, & whether known or not to exist at the time of the lease.

The demise being of the house & premises the question is what passed under that claim? I take it that a demise of the surface amounts to a demise of all that lies above & also of all below the surface (TURNER, V.-C.).—WHITTINGTON v. CORDER (1852), 20 L. T. O. S. 175; 16 Jur. 1034.

1785. Land—Includes woods.—DOCKWRAY & BEAL'S CASE (1614), Godb. 256; 78 E. R. 149.

1786. ——— Includes houses.—A. lets a garden-ground for years, & the lessee demises part of the term to an undertenant, who builds on it. By a grant of the garden-ground, the buildings thereon will also pass.—BURTON v. BROWN (1622), Cro. Jac. 648; Palm. 319; 79 E. R. 559.

1787. ——— Whether includes chattel found beneath surface—Not in contemplation of parties.—ELWES v. BRIGG GAS CO., No. 2338, post.

1788. Land in village—Whether mountain of same name included.—In 1704 was granted a lease of certain land in the county of Tipperary. The land was described in the demise, as "Lands, etc., in Scartany, containing 94 acres; Garryroan, containing 104 acres; & the village of Scartnaglowrane, & part of Whitechurch & Tincurry, containing 148 acres, with all rights"; there was then a reservation of mines & of the liberty of fishing & fowling, in favour of the lessor, & of "the liberty of commonage & cutting of turf on the mountain of Tincurry" in favour of certain specified tenants of the lessor. The lease was a renewable lease, & had been renewed twice since that period, in the same terms. The mountain was equally known by the name of the Mountain of Scartnaglowrane or of Tincurry. There was a collection of houses generally called the village of Scartnaglowrane on one of its sides. This village of Tincurry was at some little distance from it. The houses of the former village, & the arable land attached to them, had from time to time been increased in number & extent at the pleasure of the lessee & his under tenants, who regularly paid him rent for the same, & their cattle alone grazed on the mountain. The lessee had always sported on the mountain:—Held: these facts had been properly admitted in evidence, to explain the words of the demise, & having been so, the judge ought to have left to the jury, & ought not to have decided of his own authority, the question whether the mountain of Scartnaglowrane passed under the demise.—WATERPARK (LORD) v. FEN-NELL (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 650; 33 L. T. O. S.

PART VII. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 3.—B.

c. Land.—In the absence of any context to the contrary the word "land" includes what happens to be annexed to it.—STILLER v. DURBAN CORPN. (1918), 39 N. L. R. 350.—S. AF.

1789. Building—Does not include hoarding.]—

In 1883 certain land which had been laid out for building was mortgaged, & in 1884 the mtgor., being still in possession, granted leases of parts of it to pltf., who had built houses on the premises. The mtgees., who were not parties to the leases, in 1886 & 1887 sold some of the land in the rear of the houses to defts., who turned it into a cricket ground, & erected a wooden hoarding on the boundary of their land & opposite pltf.'s window to prevent him overlooking the field:—Held: whether the building scheme was in abeyance or not, the hoarding was not a building contemplated by the scheme.—WILSON v. QUEEN'S CLUB, [1891] 3 Ch. 522; 60 L. J. Ch. 698; 65 L. T. 42; 40 W. R. 172.

C. Tenements and Hereditaments.

1790. Tenement—General rule.]—(1) A grant of "warren" may pass the soil; it may pass nothing but a franchise to be exercised over the soil. The phrase "a warren of conies" will only pass the franchise.

(2) A right of entering within the limits of a warren to kill rabbits may be properly described as a "tenement."

The Duchy of Cornwall was in the possession both of the soil of a manor, & of a warren of conies existing over certain parts of the manor. In Mar., 1799, the Duchy granted a lease to P., in which the subjects granted were thus described: "All that piece or parcel of woodland situate in B., etc. & all that close called, etc., & all that warren of conies, with all & singular the rights, members, & appurtenances whatsoever in B., etc., aforesaid; & that lodge or house thereupon built, etc.; & also that warren of conies, with all & singular the rights, members, & appurtenances whatsoever in lt., etc., both of which said warrens of conies are called or known by the name of B. warren, & do extend themselves in & over the wastes or moors of B., F., & S., & A.," etc.:—Held: these words did not carry the soil, but only a right to the conies, & whatever was fairly incident to, or necessary for, the preserving & making profit of them.

I have no doubt that the word "tenements" in the Act must be taken in its fullest sense, & as Blackstone says "though in its vulgar acceptation it is only applied to houses & other buildings, yet in its original, proper, & legal sense, it signifies everything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether it be of a substantial & sensible, or of an unsubstantial ideal kind." That a rabbit warren which passes no interest in the soil, but merely gives a right of entering within the limits of the warren to kill rabbits, is a tenement was decided in the case of R. v. Piddletrenthide Inhabitants (1790), 3 Term Rep. 772 (LORD CHELMSFORD).—BEAUCHAMP (EARL) v. WINN (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 223; 22 W. R. 193, H. L.

F. Water.

1797. "All streams that might be found in" property demised—Includes all wells in existence & subsequently found.]—By lease, dated 1827, D. demised to W. a dwelling-house & fifteen closes of land, & granted all streams of water that might be found in four of those closes called the Clough, the Moorin Clough, the Brow, & the Marleds, excepting out of the demise all timber & other trees, etc., mines & minerals, etc., stone, gravel, sand & clay, etc., & all streams of water, except those above granted, then being or thereafter to be found in, or upon the premises demised, with power for D. his heirs & assigns, & his & their servants & workmen, from time to time, to enter upon the premises, & to crop, fall, search for & make marketable all or any of the before mentioned articles; to make any clay into bricks or tile on the premises, etc.; & to divert or alter the course of any river, brook, spring, or water. There was a plan annexed to the lease showing a stream of water on the north side of the demised premises & flowing through their whole extent from west to east. The Clough, the Moorin Clough, the Brow, and the Marleds, were situate on the banks of this stream. There was no other stream on the surface, but certain wells were in existence in those closes, & others were subsequently found:—Held: the wells & all water in the Clough, the Moorin Clough, the Brow, & the Marleds passed by the grant in question to W., & neither D. nor his lessees could work the mines so as to cut off the springs in the closes in question.

Part of the profits of the mill consisted of water rents, for flooding meadows, for water which was wholly diverted from the mill:—Held: by the exception, the heir of the lessor was entitled to the water rents, the exception not being repugnant to the grant.—LAMBERT v. BENNETT (1805), 3 Smith, K. B. 84.

Reservation—Must be in plain terms.]—The owner of land under which there were several strata of coal, demised one of the upper strata to pltf., reserving to himself & his lessees the right of working any coal not included in that demise, & the same powers & privileges with respect to such last-mentioned coal as if that demise had not been made; provided always, that in exercising such powers & privileges the working of the coal then demised should not be prevented or unnecessarily interfered with, & that compensation should be made to pltf. for any necessary interference with the workings. The landowner afterwards demised some of the strata of coal underlying the coal demised to pltf. to the M. co. Pltf. brought an action for an injunction against the landowner & the co.:—Held: the proviso in the lease was unintelligible & could not determine the rights of the parties: & if a lessor wished to reserve rights in derogation of his grant, he must do so in plain terms; & on that ground pltf. was entitled to an injunction if he could prove that the works threatened by defts. would in all probability affect the security of his mine.—MUNDY v. The tenants were in the habit of passing over the yard & using a common pump & privy there. There was no evidence whether the yard formed part of the demise or not. In trespass by one of the tenants against the landlord for excluding him from the yard, the judge left it to the jury to say whether the landlord at the time of the demise had reserved the yard:—Held: this was a misdirection, the question being whether he had demised it, & not whether he had reserved it.—HEBBERT v. to the play:—Held: “long grass” in the lease to the golf club meant long grass from the point of view of the golfer, & a material obstruction to the game: & the golf club in cutting the grass with a mowing machine to the length of half an inch or three quarters of an inch had done no more than was reasonably necessary for the maintenance of the course.—*WOODWARD v. SUB-SECT. 6.—WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

See, generally, WATER SUPPLY; WATERS & WATERCOURSES.

1814. General grant of watercourses—Reserving one specifically.—A pattern lease contained a grant of waters & watercourses, excepting to the lessor “a watercourse flowing or descending from a head weir,” erected on the premises, “in & through a meadow,” “parcel of the premises,” “& from thence conveyed by a trough into a meadow,” “for watering & improving the same & other lands of” the lessor. At that time, the weir forced the water of a natural stream to flow along an artificial trough, so as to irrigate lands of the lessor below. After 1749, M., a lessee, erected a mill above the weir, & used some of the water, which returned to the natural stream below the weir, & could not be used for irrigating the lands below. Afterwards a tenant for life leased the premises, “together with so much of the water” as M. had “been accustomed to have,”

for working his mill, “also the use of the water descending from the head weir,” “except & reserving to the occupiers of the meadows watered by the course running from the head weir,” & thence by the trough, the right “to take the water for watering the meadows having the right thereto as heretofore accustomed”:—Held: the pattern lease did not except the channel over which the water flowed, but only subjected it to the easement; & therefore the last lease did not grant more land than the pattern lease.—Doe d. EGREMONT (EARL) v. WILLIAMS & HOLE (1848), 11 Q. B. 688; 17 L. J. Q. B. 154; 11 L. T. O. S. 27; 12 Jur. 455; 116 E. R. 631.

1815. Reservation of passage for “water & soil” — Extent of right.—In a lease of certain premises with their appurtenances the lessor reserved out of the demise “the free running of water & soil coming from any other buildings & lands contiguous to the premises hereby demised in & through the sewers & watercourses made or to be made within, through, or under the said premises:”—Held: (1) the reservation extended to water & soil coming from contiguous lands & buildings, whether that water or soil in the first instance actually arose on or from such contiguous lands or buildings or not; (2) it did not extend beyond water in its natural condition, & such matters as are the product of the ordinary use of land for habitation, & therefore it did not give to the occupier of certain tan-pits, who claimed under the lessor, a right of passage for the refuse of those pits.—CHADWICK v. MARSDEN (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 285; 36 L. J. Ex. 177; 16 L. T. 666; 31 J. P. 535; 15 W. R. 961.

SUB-SECT. 7.—WAYS.

Rights of way generally, see EASEMENTS, Vol. XIX., pp. 93 et seq.

1816. Reservation of power to divert road.—Where a lessor had power by the lease to divert a road if he made a certain other alteration:—Held: he had power at any time to make the alteration, & divert the road, although he might have made the alteration for the purpose of entitling himself to divert the road, & in this respect a power under a deed differed from a power conferred by Act of Parliament.—BUTT v. IMPERIAL GAS CO. (1866), 2 Ch. App. 158; 16 L. T. 820; 31 J. P. 310; 15 W. R. 92, L. C.

1817. Exception of passage & basement—Extent of lessor's rights.—Defts. demised to ptf. a block of freehold business premises in Aldermanbury, in the City of London, excepting out of the demise “the way of passage & basement under the same” shown on the plan & leading from Aldermanbury through the ground floor & underneath the first floor of the demised building to property of defts. in rear of the block. The passage was entered from Aldermanbury through double doors, the floor was of concrete carried on iron girders & covered with mosaic and “Terrazzo,” the walls were faced with glazed bricks, & there was a fire-proof division between the passage & the first floor above it. Seventeen years after the grant of the lease defts. proceeded to demolish the floor of the passage & remove the “tie” girders in order

k. — Building not lessor's property.—The owner of an oil well lot, on which was also situate a blacksmith's shop, which was known not to be the property of the owner of the land, agreed to lease the oil well & lot for a term of years without any express reservation of the blacksmith's shop. The intended lessee insisted on obtaining a lease without any reservation of such shop, & filed a bill for that purpose. The bill was dismissed.—MORRIS v. KEMP (1867), 13 Cr. 487.—CAN.

to make a timber cartway from the entrance in Aldermanbury down to the level of the basement in the rear of the building for the purpose of carting building materials & debris to & from the Guildhall across their property in rear of the demised premises. In an action by plff. to restrain these proceedings & the resultant nuisance from noise:—Held: (1) on the construction of the lease, the property in half the north wall & in the floor of the passage had been reserved to defts. & that they had not committed a trespass in removing the floor of the passage & the girders from the north wall; (2) defts. could use the passage for any purpose allowed by law not injuriously affecting the rest of the building, & there was no implied obligation upon them to keep & use the passage & basement in the condition in which they were at the date of the lease; (3) the stability of the north wall had not been affected by the acts of defts.; (4) there had been no breach of defts.' covenant for quiet enjoyment, & the annoyance, being temporary, did not constitute a cause of action.—*PHILPS v. (2) Where a lease is made without an exception of the timber trees, the immediate owner of the inheritance, by the assent of the lessee, may cut them down.

(3) If lessee cuts down the trees, excepted out of his lease, the lessor shall have trespass vi et armis against him.—PERCY'S CASE (1609), 13 Co. Rep. 60; Ley, 20; 77 E. R. 1470.

1820. — With power to enter & cut—Right of lessor to assign.—If a lease be made, with exception of the trees, & a power reserved to the lessor to enter & cut them down, he may assign this power to another person; but if it be not properly pursued, the lessee may maintain trespass, both against the lessor & his assignee.—WARREN v. ARTHUR (1682), 2 Mod. Rep. 317; 86 E. R. 1097.

1821. — On payment of compensation—Unlawful cutting by third party.—In a lease the lessor reserved a right to enter & cut timber, making reasonable satisfaction to the lessee for any damage occasioned thereby; covenant does not lie by such lessee for any wrongful act of cutting down by a third person, if without the consent or authority of the lessor, however he may countenance the act afterwards. But where it only appeared that the lessor had promised to make compensation afterwards for such wrongful act, if the wrong doer himself did not, it was not considered as an adoption of the act, nor as evidence of a prior consent to it, whereon to found an action on the covenant.—GRIFFITHS v. BROME (1794), 6 Term Rep. 66; 101 E. R. 438.

1822. Exception of specific number of trees—From grant of profits of wood.—A lease was made of a manor with all gardens, orchards, yards, etc., & with all the profits of a wood, except to the lessor forty trees to take at his pleasure:—Held: the wood was not comprised within the lease, but the lessee should only have the profits, as pawnage, herbage, etc.—ANON. (1579), 4 Leon. 8; 74 E. R. 691.

1824. General rule—Lease for uncertain term—Without reservation of annual rent.—ROE d. BREE v. LEES, No. 1980, post.

1825. — — — — ——If an agreement be made, to let premises so long as both parties like, & reserving a compensation, accruing de die in diem, & not referable to a year, or any aliquot part of a year, it does not create a holding from year to year, but a tenancy at will, strictly so called. Though the tenant has expended money on the improvement of the premises, that does not give him a term to hold until he is indemnified.

A mere general letting is a letting at will, if the lessor accepts yearly rent or rent measured by any aliquot part of a year the cts. have said that is evidence of a taking for a year (CHAMBRE, J.).

If two parties agree that the one shall let & the other shall hold so long as both parties please that is a holding at will & there is nothing to hinder parties from making such an agreement (MANSFIELD, C.J.).—RICHARDSON v. LANGRIDGE (1811), 4 Taunt. 128; 128 E. R. 277.

1826. — — — — — “At will & pleasure” — Reservation of annual rent.—Proviso in a deed: A.

agrees to become tenant to C. & D. of the premises, etc., "at their will & pleasure, at & after the rate of £25 4s. per annum, payable quarterly." A. remained in possession under this agreement for two years & paid a year's rent; after which the lessors distrained for four quarters' rent:—Held: A. was tenant at will, & not from year to year.—DOE d. BASTOW v. COX (1847), 11 Q. B. 122; 17 L. J. Q. B. 3; 10 L. T. O. S. 132; 11 Jur. 991; 116 E. R. 421.

1828. Necessity for contract—Mere silence insufficient.—(1) To constitute a tenancy at will, there must be a contract, the lessor must be bound as well as the lessee (BRAMWELL, B.).

(2) Mere silence on the part of pltf. did not constitute or make evidence of a tenancy at will. . . It is clear that Littleton & his commentator alike suppose an affirmative consent & not a mere negative or silent consent (BRAMWELL, B.).—LEY v. PETER (1858), 3 H. & N. 101; 27 L. J. 1831. Grant by lessee for years.—If a lessee for years of a messuage grants totum messuagium suum the grantee has but at will, but if he grant all his interest & estate in such a messuage then the whole lease passes.—(GRIFFIN'S CASE (1589), 2 Leon. 78; 74 E. R. 372.

1832. ———.]—If a termor grants the land generally, the grantee is but a tenant at will; if he devises the land all his term passes (HOLT, C.J.).—GERMAIN v. ORCHARD (1691), *Holt, K. 1834. By acknowledgment of tenant—Signature to assessment.—(1) A., in 1817, let B. into possession of a farm as tenant at will, & in 1827, A. entered upon the land without B.'s consent, & cut & carried away stone therefrom:—Held: this entry amounted to a determination of the estate at will.

(2) In 1829, B. being one of the assessors for the land tax in the parish, signed an assessment, in which he was named as the occupier of the farm, & A. as the proprietor:—Held: this was evidence whence the jury might infer that a new tenancy at will had been created between the parties.—*TURNER v. But this doctrine applies only to the case where the cestui que trust is the actual occupant. If he is merely allowed to receive the rents, or otherwise deal with the estate in the hands of the occupying tenants, he stands in the relation merely of an agent or bailiff of the trustees who choose to allow him to act for them in the management of the estate. In the latter case, if the actual occupier is permitted to occupy for more than the twenty years prescribed by Real Property Limitation Act,

Sect. 4.—Tenancy at will: Sub-sect. 1, B. & C.]

1833 (c. 27), without paying rent, the result is that the trustees lose their title exactly as in any ordinary case of landlord & tenant.

M. had been led into possession by the trustees, a tenancy at will would have been established, which would not have been determined by his letting in C. as his under-tenant unless the trustees had had notice of such underletting, of which there was no evidence, for though the general rule is that a tenancy at will is not assignable, because the transfer determines the tenancy, yet the rule is subject to the qualification that a tenant at will cannot determine his tenancy by transferring his interest to a third party without notice to his landlord (CHESWELL, J.).—MELLING v. LEAK (1855), 16 C. B. 652; 3 C. L. R. 1017; 24 L. J. C. P. 187; 1 Jur. N. S. 759; 3 W. R. 595; 139 E. R. 915.

1839. — Parol variation of written agreement.—If there be a written agreement between landlord & tenant, that for certain premises the tenant shall pay £170 a year, & afterwards an arrangement is made by parol that £30 a year shall be allowed out of it, because the landlord is to occupy a certain part for a time, such parol arrangement does not vary the agreement so as to reduce the rent payable under it; & therefore an allegation is correct which states it to be £170.

Pltf. is tenant of the whole to W. & permits W. to occupy a part, that is, at the utmost, a tenancy at will; & pltf. may have it determined at his pleasure (BEST, C.J.).—HILTON v. GOODHIND (1827), 2 C. & P. 591, N. P.

1840. Occupation rent free.—Dwelling-house, if the owner of a house suffer a person to live in it rent free, it may be stated to be that person's house; such person is tenant at will.—R. v. COLLETT (1823), Russ. & Ry. 498, C. C. R.

1841. — Owner occasionally living with occupier.—W. seised in fee of a house & land, died in 1798, leaving a widow, & his son J. a minor above fourteen years of age. The widow, with whom J. lived, continued to occupy the house & land. In 1798, J. being still a minor, the widow married deft. who continued thenceforward to occupy the house & land. In 1805 J. left the premises, but occasionally resided there afterwards for two or three weeks at a time, with deft. & his wife. The wife died in 1811. In 1842 J. mortgaged the premises in fee to the lessor of pltf. for money which was paid to deft., deft. himself being present at the execution of the deed & privy to its contents, & receiving the money from J.:—Held: in ejectment by the mtgee. the jury were warranted in presuming that deft. occupied as tenant at will to J.—Doe d. GROVES v. GROVES (1847), 10 Q. B. 486; 16 L. J. Q. B. 297; 9 L. T. O. S. 72; 11 Jur. 558; 116 E. R. 185.

1842. — As manager of society.—A voluntary assocn. was formed for the purpose of printing & publishing the writings of S., & certain regulations were agreed to, & amongst others, that the affairs of the society should be conducted by a committee of twelve members elected at the annual meetings & the treasurer, & that the committee might appoint a salaried agent or manager. In 1854, the society having determined to establish a library, etc. & to take premises for that purpose & for that of a shop, the committee advertised for a librarian, etc., & subsequently appointed W. to the office, & resolved that he should have the premises rent & taxes free & 35 per cent. on certain profits & that he should be allowed to carry on a retail business in New Church works & general literature for his own benefit. On July 5, 1860, the committee resolved that W. be manager at a salary of £75 & six months' notice of separation on either side. In 1855 the residue of the term in the house and premises became vested in four of the committee in trust for the society. The ground floor was converted into a shop, etc., the first floor into a library, etc., & W. was permitted to occupy the upper rooms as a residence. W., having become the publisher of spiritualistic works which the committee considered would be injurious to the society, they in July, 1860, desired W. to discontinue the publication of such works. On Aug. 2 he wrote to the committee refusing to do so, on the ground that he became their manager on the understanding that he was to be allowed to carry on an independent business. The committee then gave six months' notice to terminate his engagement. On Oct. 4 the notice was withdrawn W. having agreed to comply with the wishes of the committee. On Oct. 13 a requisition signed by several members of the society was sent to the committee, calling on them to summon a special general meeting to take into consideration their resolutions of July as to the publication of the works objected to, & also as to the propriety of altering the laws of the society. The committee declined to call a meeting, but on Nov. 8 they met, & passed resolutions dismissing W. from his office without notice, & requiring possession, which they immediately obtained by force of the house & premises. On Nov. 12, & 13 general meetings, as alleged of the society took place, & resolutions were passed approving of W.'s conduct, disapproving of that of the committee, & making alterations in the laws, & authorising W. to obtain possession, which he shortly afterwards did by force of the house & premises. Eleven of the committee, including the four trustees then filed a bill for relief; & on motion, the ct. granted an injunction restraining W. from acting as manager, selling the books, recovering the moneys, & from publishing any spiritualistic works at the house of the society, & from disturbing pltf. or their agents in the possession of the house, etc., & from carrying on his business therein, on the ground that the legal estate was vested in the trustees, & that W. was merely a tenant at will, but without prejudice to any question as to the right of W. to recover damages.—SPURGIN v. WHITE (1860), 2 Giff. 473; 3 L. T. 609; 7 Jur. N. S. 15; 9 W. R. 266; 66 E. R. 198.

b. Payment & acceptance of rent —On terms of yearly tenancy—After expiration.—Where the landlord, before he accepted any rent after expiry of motive for consenting to the occupation is charitable does not make the possession of the occupier the constructive possession of the owner nor the occupier himself the owner's guest. The occupier is tenant at will of the owner, & if the occupation continues uninterrupted for thirteen years, the right of the owner to the land will be barred under Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 7 as amended by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (c. 57).

1846. Surrender of existing tenancy.—Agreement to quit at one month's notice.]—S. having for some years held a piece of ground under the East India Co., which they proposed to take for the purpose of public improvement, a negotiation took place for S. surrendering the land & re-acquiring it on condition of giving up possession on one month's notice. At the time of proposing the surrender, S. believed the improvement in question was a new road, which would greatly benefit his adjacent property, & such was also at first the intention of the co. It seemed, however, the co. varied the nature of the improvement ultimately contemplated. S. afterwards, without any definite notice of the improvement, surrendered the land & executed an agreement reciting the transaction & referring generally to the improvement as "a public improvement," without further describing it, & agreeing to quit at a month's notice:—Held: the co. were entitled at law to bring an ejectment for the land, & S. had no defence; but his remedy, if any, was in equity.

The lessors of pltf. had become the absolute owners of the land, & upon the proposed assumption they would have let S. into possession under an agreement that they would not disturb him until after a month from a contingent uncertain event [the commencement of certain improvements] what was the nature of this interest? Did it create any tenancy between the parties? If so, of what description? It certainly was not a tenancy for years, nor from year to year, nor for a year certain, nor for a month, nor for any other certain time. In the course of the agreement or appls. it was suggested that the agreement passed a freehold interest; & certainly from the indefinite character of the interest given it seems best to answer this description. . . . Now an interest of this nature could not be created by parol, or by a mere writing such as the instrument of Oct. 11, 1852 which therefore could only operate as an agreement. S. having been admitted or holding under this agreement, & the same sort of possession being continued by appls. he & they after him could not be treated as trespassers but were in as tenants at will; of course such a tenancy was terminated by the mere bringing of an ejectment (per cur.).—DOSSEE v. DOE d. EAST INDIA CO. (1859), 1 L. T. 345; sub nom. ANUNDOMOHEY DOSSEE v. EAST INDIA CO., 8 W. R. 245, P. C.

1847. Occupation dependent on employment.]—It appears that appls. & other workmen are only entitled to occupy the houses during the time of their service at the colliery; the occupation terminates at the time the service terminates. Still, appls. are tenants, though not tenants for any fixed time. They occupy as tenants at will as long as they reside in the houses by the arrangement between themselves & their masters (MELLOR, J.).—SMITH v. SEGILL OVERSEERS (1875), 1 L. R. 10 Q. 1848. Express tenancy by letter.—Until arrangement arrived at.]—(1) A colliery lease, which empowered the lessees to carry foreign coal over the surface, provided that all disputes relating to the lease should be referred to arbn. Shortly before the expiration of the term the lessees by letter requested the lessors to grant an extension of the lease on the existing terms for six months, & the lessors wrote in reply that the lessees might consider themselves tenants at will of both mine & way-leave pending further arrangements. The lessors having brought an action against the lessees in respect of their exercise of the way-leave during the tenancy at will, the lessees applied for a stay of proceedings under Arbitration Act, 1889 (c. 49), s. 4:—Held: upon the construction of the letters, that the terms of the lease, including the arbn. clause, applied to the tenancy at will, so far as applicable to such a tenancy, & the proceedings ought to be stayed.

(2) Where on the expiration of a lease the lessee is expressly authorised to continue in possession as tenant at will, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, the terms & conditions of the original lease apply to the tenancy at will so far as they are consistent with such tenancy.—*MORGAN v. 1849. Payment & acceptance of rent.]—If lessee for years hold over & pay his rent quarterly, that makes a tenant at will.

In debt for rent upon a lease at will of houses in London, upon a trial at the Bar touching the title of B., it was agreed that if tenant for years holds over his term, & continue to pay his rent quarterly as before, that this payment & acceptance of the lease, expressly told the tenant that he would not consent to any tenancy from year to year, so as to require any notice of termination to be given, but that they should remain in the same position as they were on the expiry of the lease, to which the tenant assented—the rent, however, to be the same as that reserved in the lease, & to be paid in like manner:—

1856. Question for jury.]—In 1816 A. let B. into possession of lands under an agreement for purchase, which was never completed. B. continued in possession till his death in 1822, without having paid rent. He devised all his real estate to C., his widow, who entered into possession of the premises. Rent was demanded of her in 1827, which she promised to pay, but did not.

In ejectment for the premises brought in 1842 by parties claiming under A., it was left to the jury to say whether a tenancy at will had been created between A. & C., the article being otherwise barred by Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 7:—Held: a proper direction.—DOE d. STANWAY v. ROCK (1842), 4 Man. & G. 30; 11 L. J. C. P. 194; 6 Jur. 266; 134 E. R. 13; & previous proceedings, Car. & M. 549, N. P.

1857. Where sale not completed.]—A., having agreed to buy certain lands of B., had paid part of the purchase-money, & was let into possession. B. had not executed any conveyance:—Held: this was a mere tenancy at will in A., & if B. had made a demand of possession, to determine the tenancy at will, he might recover the lands by ejectment.—DOE d. HIATT v. MILLER (1833), 5 C. & P. 595, N. P.

1858. —.]—(1) A party who has been let into possession of land on a contract of sale which has not been completed, is a tenant at will to the vendor.

(2) A feoffment, with livery of seisin made on the land determines a tenancy at will, though the tenant be not present, nor assenting to the feoffment; & the feoffee may maintain trespass against the tenant at will who has entered on his possession.—BALL v. CULLMORE (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 120; 1 Gale, 96; 5 Tyr. 753; 4 L. J. Ex. 137; 150 E. R. 51.

Annotation:—As to (2) Refd. Hogan v. Hand (1861), 14 Moo. P. C. C. 310.

1859. —.]—A. in the year 1819 agreed to purchase lands of B. for £670, & paid a deposit of £10. The agreement did not contain any stipulation that A. should be let into possession, but in fact he was so at Michaelmas in the year 1819. A. continued in possession, & neither paid any more of the purchase-money nor any rent or interest, & in 1822 A. cut down timber, & in 1824 levied a fine with proclamations, & mortgaged the property, & after that died, leaving the property, subject to the mtge., to his daughters:—Held: these facts were no bar to B. in ejectment brought within twenty years after, Michaelmas, 1839, as A. coming in under an intended purchase was in equity the owner of the land, with a liability to pay the purchase-money, & his cutting trees was consistent with his holding in that character, & not adversely to the rights of the vendor, to whom at law he was tenant at will.—DOE d. COUNSELL v. CAPERTON (1839), 9 C. & P. 112.

1860. — On specified date.]—Where a party was let into possession of land under an agreement of purchase, he paying interest after the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the purchase-money until the completion of the purchase, which was to be in three months; & the purchase not being then completed, he continued in possession on the same terms:—Held: this was only a tenancy at will, which might be determined without notice to quit.—DOE d. TOMES v. CHAMBERLAINE (1839), 5 M. & W. 14; 9 L. J. Ex. 38; 151 E. R. 7.

1863. —.]—Pending a negotiation for an assignment of a lease A. was, as the jury found, deft. gave an absolute conveyance of certain property to plff. Later deft. claimed that this conveyance was intended to be a mtge.:—Held: it was not a mtge. & deft. remained in possession as a tenant at will, & landlord had right to possession.—GIRROIR v. RONAN (1909), 7 E. L. R. 153.—CAN.

d. Distinguished from tenancy by sufferance.]—Where a tenant holds over after the expiration of his lease without further agreement, such holding over, though by English law styled a tenancy by sufferance, is wrongful. Slight evidence, however, will suffice to change his position into that of a tenant at will.—KANTHEPPA RADDI v. SRISHAPPA (1897), 1 L. R. 22 Bom. 893.—IND.*

PART VIII. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.—D.

1855 i. General rule.]—A person taking possession of land under an agreement to purchase, which specified no time for the continuance of the possession in the event of the purchase not being completed, becomes a tenant at will.—DOE v. DENNY (1854), 3 All. 50.—CAN.

1855 ii. —.]—A. entered into possession of certain premises under an agreement with B. for sale:—Held: A., by taking possession under the agreement, only became tenant at will to B.—FARRELY v. ROBINS (1869), 1 L. T. 3 C. L. 284.—IR.

1857 i. Where sale not completed.]—F. went into possession of lands under an agreement to purchase from B., but before the agreement was fully completed it was put an end to by the consent of both parties. F. continued in possession for a time, & while so in possession, leased the land to deft. T.

B. entered with the declared intention of terminating the estate of F., & after entering, leased the land to W.:—Held: after the rescission of the agreement to purchase, F. was a mere tenant at will, or by sufferance, & the entry by B. put an end to the tenancy.—WOODWORTH v. THOMAS (1892), 25 N. S. R. 42.—CAN.

1857 ii. —.]—When a purchaser enters under a contract of sale, the tenancy at will arising therefrom is determined by a rescission of the contract, without any demand of possession.—MARKEY v. COOTE (1876), 1 L. R. 10 C. L. 149.—IR.

e. Agreement for payment by instalments.]—W. went into possession of a lot of land under an instrument in writing whereby it was agreed that the purchase-money was to be paid in four equal instalments. It was also let into the possession of the premises as tenant of some kind. The negotiation going off, B., the landlord, demanded the key & wrote to A. telling him that he never intended to let him into possession at all, & A. refusing to go out, B. entered & forcibly expelled him & his family, in the doing of which pltf. & his wife were assaulted :—Held: although pltf. was entitled to recover damages for the assaults, he was not entitled to damages for the expulsion, his tenancy being at the most a tenancy at will, & that having been properly determined.—POLLEN v. BREWER (1859), 7 C. B. N. S. 371; 1 L. T. 9; 6 Jur. N. S. 509; 141 E. R. 860.

Annotation:—Consd. Beddall v. Maitland (1881), 17 Ch. D. 174.

1864. Compulsory purchase—Entry pending arbitration.—A railway co., having by its Act of Parliament powers to take lands compulsory, entered, by the consent of a landowner, upon certain of the lands, & an agreement was made between the landowner & the co. to refer the question of the amount of compensation to an arbitrator. After the award was made, but before payment of any money or any tender of a conveyance of the lands, the land owner gave the co. notice to quit the lands, & brought an action of ejectment:—Held: the action was not maintainable.

Under the special Act defts. had a right to get possession of the property by proceeding in a certain manner. Instead of that, all the parties interested agree to refer to an arbitrator. Meanwhile defts. take possession, & probably make valuable improvements. They cannot be treated as mere tenants at will, or at any time be made to become trespassers by a demand of possession (LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.):—*DOE d. HUDSON v. LEEDS & BRADFORD RY. (2) If a lease at will be made to three rendering rent & one dies, it is no determination of the lease.

(3) If husband & wife lease land at will, rendering rent, & the husband dies; it is no countermand of the will.—HENSTEAD'S CASE (1594), 5 Co. Rep. 10 a; 77 E. R. 63.

1870. Agreement by tenant to purchase.—To sustain the plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, deft. must aver, that the vendor was, or pretended to be, seised; & that he was in possession; which would be satisfied by the possession of his tenant. On the other hand, if pltf. had no lease, but merely this equitable agreement [to purchase by the tenant], & had taken possession under that, the subsequent purchaser could not have made out the averment, that pltf. was in possession. Such an agreement would have determined a tenancy at will (LORD ELDON, C.):—DANIELS v. DAVISON (1809), 10 Ves. 249; 33 E. R. 978, L. C.; subsequent proceedings (1811), 17 Ves. 433, L. C.

1878. ———.]—The proviso as to cestuis que trust contained in Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 7, applies only to cases of declared & express trusts, & not to the case of a person holding under an agreement to purchase.

If a person who has agreed to purchase real property be let into possession, he is a tenant at will, & such tenancy at will is determined by his death: & if after his death his widow, who is also devisee of his real estate, continue in possession, this is not a continuance of his tenancy at will, so as to prevent the operation of that statute, & therefore in such a case, where the person thus let into possession died more than twenty years before the ejectment brought by the representatives of the intended vendor, it was held that it was too late, unless a new tenancy could be shown in the widow, the first year of whose tenancy was within twenty years before the ejectment; & if such new tenancy were shown, no demand of possession would be necessary, as such new tenancy would be determined by the death of the widow, which occurred before the ejectment.—DOE d. STANWAY v. ROCK (1842), Car. & M. 549, N. P.; subsequent proceedings, 4 Man. & G. 30.

1907. Execution of conveyance—To landlord of tenant at will—Tenancy at will before completion.]

—A., some time before 1824, being under contract to purchase, let B., his son, into possession of the premises contracted for as tenant at will. The conveyance to A. was executed in 1824, & A. mortgaged the premises in 1829. B. occupied the premises from the time he was let into possession till 1831, when he died, & his widow, deft., occupied them till the day of the demise in the declaration Jan. 8, 1845. The jury finding that B.'s tenancy at will commenced more than twenty-one years before the day of the demise in the declarations:—Held: (1) the conveyance to A. did not determine the tenancy at will of B; (2) the mtge. by A. did not determine such tenancy even if it could be supposed to exist, with reference to the Statute of Limitations, after the expiration of one year from its commencement, & an action of ejectment against deft. was barred by Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), ss. 2, 7.—DOE d. It also contained a covenant by the mtgee. for quiet enjoyment by the mtgor., as tenant at will to the mtgee., on the payment of a certain yearly rent by two equal half-yearly payments, but no livery of seisin was made to the mtgor.:—Held: under this deed the mtgor. was tenant at will only to the mtgee., & no tenancy from year to year was thereby created.

Under this lease plff. entered; but deft. refused to give up certain plants he had himself planted, & subsequently entered & took them away:—Held: he was liable in trespass; though the lease was invalid, there was evidence that plff. entered under the authority of all the parish officers; & therefore deft.'s tenancy, being either a tenancy at will or on sufferance, was lawfully determined, & his entry wrongful.—WALLIS v. 1935. Right to remove furniture.]—A minister of a dissenting congregation placed in the possession of a chapel & dwelling-house by certain persons, in whom the legal estate is vested, in trust to permit & suffer the chapel to be used for the purpose of religious worship, is a mere tenant at will to those trustees; & his tenancy is determined instantaneously by a demand of possession. SECT. 5.—TENANCY AT SUFFERANCE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—HOW CREATED.

1936. Necessity for lawful entry.]—Note for law, that there is no tenant by sufferance but he that first enters by authority & lawfully, as where a man leases for years, or for term of another's life, & holds over his term after the term expired, or after the death of cestui que vie, & tenant at will is, where a man leases his land to another at will; for he who enters of his head is a disseisor.—ANON. (circa 1537), Bro. N. C. 175; 73 E. R. 923.

1937. ———.]—If a tenant pur autre vie of a manor grant by copy, after the death of the cestui que vie, it shall not bind the lessor, for he was a tenant at sufferance; & a writ of entry ad terminum que pratenit lies against him, but it is otherwise as to admittances by him.—ROUS & ARTERS (1587), 4 Co. 1940. ———.]—In 1779, P. demised certain land of which he was then seised to M. & co., for a term of sixty-five years. In 1794 an Act was obtained by the Swansea Canal co. for the purpose of making a canal through part of the land in question; and by sect. 47 of that Act, it was enacted, that, upon payment or tender of certain sums of money, adjusted by certain commissioners or assessed by a jury, for the purchase of any such lands, etc., it should be lawful for the Canal co. to enter upon such lands, or before such payment or tender, by leave of the owners or occupiers; and that, thereupon, such land should be vested in the co. for the purposes of the Act. In 1797, & during the continuance of the lease, B. entered into an agreement with M. & co., the lessees, by which a canal, made by the latter, was extended through part of the same land, & formed a continuation of the Swansea Canal. No payment or satisfaction was made or agreed to be made to the owners of the lands, but everything was done by B. with the full consent & in accordance with the wishes of such owners & proprietors. Upon the termination of the lease of 1779, the assignees of the reversion brought ejectments against the assignee of B., who continued in possession of the canal made upon the land demised:—Held: the mere consent of the owner of the property to the construction of the canal, did not bring the case within sect. 47 of the Act; & the lessors of pltf. were entitled to the possession of the land.

Here the defendant was a mere tenant at sufferance, as there was no evidence of a tenancy at will. He might, therefore, be treated as a trespasser or as a tenant at will, at the option of the owner (PARKE, B.).—DOE d. PATRICK v. BEAUFORT (DUKE) (1851), 6 Exch. 498; 20 L. J. Ex. 251; 155 E. The forfeiture, enures to destroy every right which the vendee took under the agreement, but does not affect any right of possession which he had before, & no previous right being proved, scilicet, the party after forfeiture is a mere tenant by sufferance, & it is sufficient for the owner previous to an ejectment to enter upon the premises indicating his intention to take possession without making any formal demand of possession.—*DOE d. 1973. —.]—The distinction taken between a tenant from year to year & a tenant for a term of years is rather a distinction in words than in substance. A tenant from year to year is entitled to estovers & the same advantages as a tenant for a term of years. In truth he is a tenant from year to year as long as both parties please; & considering how many large estates are held by this tenure, it would be dangerous to say that the term ceased at the end of the year, because then the landlord might lose his right of distress (LORD KENYON, C.J.).

If a tenant, who held from year to year, died intestate, his administrator has the same interest in the land that the intestate had. Then what was the interest of the pauper's testator? He had a right to continue on the estate another year, unless six months' notice to quit were given; & of course the pauper, his exor., had the same right (LAWRENCE, J.).—*R. v. Pltf. denied the licence, & replied to the other plea a demise from year to year, commencing on Nov. 16, 1836. Deft., in his rejoinder, denied the demise. There was evidence that Nov. 16 was the first day of each year of the tenancy, but from the evidence it seemed that the tenancy must have commenced before 1836. The defence, which was sought to be proved by an admission of pltf., was, that, at the time of the letting, pltf. had agreed to give up the possession whenever deft. required to have the land:—Held: the allegation of the tenancy was proved, although the tenancy had begun on some Nov. 16, several years before 1836, as a tenancy from year to year is considered as recommencing every year.—*TOMKINS v. 1979. — Parol demise—Entry by tenant.]—At a letting of lands, the terms of letting were read from a printed paper, & a party present agreed to take certain premises from Lady Day then next, when the lease of the then tenant would expire. No writing was signed by the parties or their agents, but there was at the foot of the printed paper a memorandum, also read over to the future tenant, stating that the parties had agreed to let & to take, subject to the printed terms, the name of the farm & the rent, & that the letting was for one year certain from Lady Day, & so from year to year, till notice to quit. Some of the terms were special, having relation to husbandry. The new tenant entered at Lady Day, & paid rent. Assuming the first transaction not to have been a demise:—Held: (1) there was a valid demise by parol under Stat. Frauds, s. 2, when the tenant entered & a demise rendered valid by that sect. might contain the same special stipulations as a regular lease; (2) on the trial of an action by the landlord against the tenant for breach for them, the paper above mentioned might be referred to, to refresh the memory of a witness as to such stipulations.—*BOLTON (LORD) v. The agreement alluded more than once to the term thereby created, & provided, amongst other things, that in case the term thereby created should be determined otherwise than by effluxion of time or legal notice, then the tenants should pay to the landlord the sum of £5, equivalent to one quarter's rent, as & by way of liquidated & ascertained damages, & to be recoverable as such by the said landlord. Defts., without any notice, gave up possession of the premises just before Sept. 29, 1870, having paid in advance all rent for the year ending on that day:—Held: the terms of the agreement created a yearly tenancy, & the landlord was entitled to recover £5 from the tenants, in an action for rent due on Sept. 29, in advance.—*FLORENCE v. The land so let was used by the tenant as a market garden. In Oct. 1896, the landlord gave the tenant notice to quit. The tenant claimed compensation for improvements under 58 & 59 Vict. c. 27, s. 4, which is to be read as part of 46 & 47 Vict. c. 61:—Held: the agreement created a tenancy from year to year, & therefore the tenant came within 58 & 59 Vict. c. 27, s. 4, as having held under a "contract of tenancy" as defined by 46 & 47 Vict. c. 61, s. 61.—*KING v. tenants from year to year merely; & assessed compensation on the principle that S. was only entitled as tenant from year to year:—Held: the arbitrator was right.

It seems to me that the parties did not intend anything more than a tenancy from year to year. By the terms of the instrument the tenant is under no obligation to work out the brick earth. When, then, is the tenancy to be terminable? It might continue for ever, if it was not to terminate till the exhaustion of the brick earth to the depth of eight feet. If there had been a premium, that might have tended to show that a greater interest was contemplated than a yearly tenancy. Here there was no power of distress or re-entry for arrears of rent, & no obligation to work the land. How then can it be supposed that the landlord intended to part with anything like a permanent interest? There is no ambiguity in the terms of the instrument; & there is nothing in it to show that it was intended to be the basis of a future instrument. I cannot conceive how evidence of the custom of the trade could have been admissible. The instrument is to be construed by its own contents (WILDE, C.J.).—Re STROUD & EAST & WEST INDIA DOCKS & BIRMINGHAM JUNCTION RY. CO. (1849), 8 C. B. 502; 19 L. J. C. P. 117; 137 E. Deft. entered & paid rent quarterly:—Held: (1) the instrument was void as a lease, on the ground of uncertainty, & on the ground that, not being within the terms of sect. 2 of the Stat. Frauds, s. 2, it ought to have been under seal pursuant to Real Property Act, 1845 (c. 106), ss. 2, 3; (2) the only estate vested in deft. was a tenancy from year to year.—*WOOD v. D. took the marl & made bricks accordingly, & paid the stipulated sums for a time; but they afterwards fell into arrear:—Held: the agreement for the marl pit & brick mine was a demise of the land from year

2001. Reservation of weekly rent—Agreement to terminate tenancy by six months' notice.]—

The pauper occupied, for four years, a tenement, at a rent which exceeded £10 a year, under an agreement, whereby the landlord agreed to let, & he agreed to take, the tenement "for one week certain," "at the weekly rent of 4s. payable daily if demanded." The agreement contained a proviso that in case the tenant should remove goods off the premises, the landlord might follow them & distrain either for a whole quarter's rent or any part of a quarter; & that six calendar months' notice to quit should be given by either party:—Held: this did not show a yearly tenancy so as to confer a settlement upon the tenant.—*R. v. 2003 i. General rule—Prima facie presumption.]—Where a tenant is let into occupation of land, under a parol agreement, for an indefinite time, with a direction to pay a third person a yearly rent due by the immediate landlord, the payment of such rent for more than a year affords evidence from which a tenancy from year to joyment during the life of A. Such a covenant in re would amount to a demise.

Where a party to a conveyance is therein described as heir-at-law of J., a surviving devisee of the legal estate, such description is not evidence of the prior death of the co-devisees, or that such party is heir of J., even against another party who executed the conveyance. Payment of rent is prima facie evidence of a tenancy from year to year. Secus, where the existence of such a tenancy would imply that devisees in trust had conveyed away their estate, whilst a duty still remained to be performed by them.

The presumption is completely rebutted by showing that the rent paid & reserved is of the same amount as the rent reserved in an unexpired lease, the premises being, at the time of such payment of rent, of much greater value than the rent so reserved & so paid.—DOE v. PRITCHARD v. DODD (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 689; 2 Nev. & M. K. B. 838; 110 E. R. 945.

Up to the year 1803 these lands had been occupied at the above rent, which was always paid in advance; in that year these lands were inclosed, & to pay the expenses the rent was raised to 12s., which was paid up to the year 1848, when all the expenses being liquidated, defts. refused to pay more than 4s. which sum was tendered & refused & the present action brought:—Held: in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, they were tenants from year to year, & entitled to notice to quit.—HUNT v. ALLGOOD (1861), 10 C. B. N. S. 253; 30 L. J. C. P. 313; 4 L. T. 215; 25 J. P. 614; 7 Jur. N. S. 1123; 9 W. R. 536; 142 E. R. 448.

Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 55, in favour of either party, the mtgee. has entered into possession & occupation of the premises, & has for some years continued to pay quarterly the original rent reserved by the lease to the lessor. That the mtgee. had done this merely to preserve his security is no defence to an action for rent due under a tenancy from year to year, nor is it a defence that the lessor had a remedy by distress.—JUMP v. PAYNE (1899), 68 L. J. Q. B. 607, N. P.

2008. ———.]—A piece of land parcel of a manor, of which there were no copyhold tenants, had been held since 1709 at a rent which had from time to time increased from 1s. to 5s. 1d. Some of the additions to the rent were traceable to additions to the holding, but some were not so traceable. There was no trace of the holding prior to 1709:—Held: defts., the present holders, were not freehold tenants at a quit rent, but merely annual tenants of the lord of the manor.—*FOL-JAMBE v. 2009. Rent must be referable to a year.—Or aliquot part of year.—RICHARDSON v. No. 1825, ante.

2010. ———.]—The lessor of pltf. has proved a tenancy from year to year in W. H., the decease of W. H., & letters of administration granted to himself in Mar. 1844. The term for a tenancy from year to year is a term, therefore vests in him until there is some legal determination of it; & thus he has made out a good prima facie case. . . . In this case I think there was no evidence that this tenancy from year to year had been determined by operation of law, as suggested, viz. by surrender, either by the administrator allowing the widow to occupy the premises under Lady H., or by a virtual assignment of them. In order to make out that, it must be shown that there was the relation of landlord & tenant, with the assent of the administrator, between Lady H. & deft. But it is further contended, that the widow, if not tenant to Lady H., was tenant from year to year to the administrator, & was entitled to six months' notice to quit; but there is no evidence at all to show an agreement for a tenancy from year to year to the administrator: it only amounts to this, that he allowed her to pay the rent for him to the head landlord instead of to himself. We cannot infer a tenancy from year to year from a simple payment by the occupier. . . . A simple permission to occupy creates a tenancy at will, unless there are circumstances to show an intention to create a tenancy from year to year; as for instance an agreement to pay rent by the quarter, or some other aliquot part of a year (PARKIE, B.).—*DOE d. At Lady Day 1824, A. demanded another half year's rent, which B. refused to pay:—Held: from these facts the law would not imply a taking

Claimant, who claimed to be entitled to a vote as a 40s. freeholder, had been declared a poor & necessitous burgess, & had been allotted one acre at a rent of 5s. per annum until further notice:—Held: claimant had no freehold or equitable interest sufficient to entitle him to a vote; the estate was held at the will of the council, & at the most his interest was not greater than that of a tenant from year to year.—*FERNIE v. 2015. — Encroachment on waste of manor.]—In 1739 articles of agreement were entered into between the lord & freehold tenants of a manor, by the eighth clause of which it was agreed that no other part of the wastes of the said manor should at any time thereafter be inclosed or built upon, unless by the mutual consent of the lord of the manor for the time being, & of the greater part in number & value of the freehold tenants of the said manor, under their hands & seals; & in case of any improvements & inclosures by such consents as aforesaid, it was agreed that the same & all profits & advantages arising therefrom should belong to & be divided between the lord & freehold tenants in the proportions therein mentioned. The articles of agreement were confirmed by a private Act of Parliament passed in the same year. Persons were appointed by the lord & freeholders to receive the rents on their behalf, & books were kept showing how the rents were received & divided, in accordance with the provisions of the articles. An entry appeared in one of these books in 1803 that one R. paid a rent of £1 1s. in respect of certain premises which were there described as a stable; & it appeared from entries in the books that he continued to do so down to 1808, when the property then in tenancy was mentioned as held by D. at a yearly rent of £2 12s. 6d. In 1811 D. was entered as holding a coal warehouse at the rent of £4 10s. "now & in future." In 1813 D. paid the same rent in respect of a coal & corn warehouse, & that rent was paid by D. & his successors in title until just before this action was brought. In 1816 D. sold or mortgaged the property for £200 to B., who subsequently reconveyed it to him for the same amount. In 1829 D. conveyed the property by lease & release to K. for £1,000. He mortgaged it to S. by feoffment for £1,000, & subsequently became bkpt., & the equity of redemption vested in his assignees. In 1836 the assignees & S. conveyed the property to J. for £1,440. In 1838 J. leased the property to R. The property was described in the lease as part of the waste of the manor, & it was provided that the lessee was to pay £4 10s. per annum, & any future rent which might become payable, to the lord & freeholders. New buildings were from time to time built on the property. Deft. became entitled to the premises under the will of his father, J. Questions having arisen as to the title to the property, deft. claiming to be entitled in fee simple, the lord & the freeholders brought this action to recover possession of it:—Held: (1) a consent to the inclosure of the property in question, in accordance with clause eight of the articles, might under the circumstances be fairly assumed, but the result of possession under such consent was that a tenancy from year to year was created; (2) the feoffment by K. to S. in 1829 did not tortiously pass the fee to S.; (3) there was no evidence that the tenants were under any misapprehension as to title, or had built under misapprehension, or that the lord or freeholders were aware of any such misapprehension of titles, & therefore deft. was not entitled to equitable relief.—*WELLER v. It appeared in evidence that by an order of the Poor Law Comrs., made on Sept. 16, 1835, which purported to be founded on the consent of two-thirds of the guardians of C., such Union was ordered to be dissolved; & on Sept. 17, another order of the Comrs. was made under Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (c. 76), that the parishes comprised in the Union of C. should, together with others, be formed into the Union of W. From the date of the latter order the guardians of the W. Union used the Union house formerly belonging to the C. Union for the poor of their Union, & payments expressed to be for rent had been made by the guardians of the W. Union to the treasurer of the C. Union until Sept. 1838, when the payments were made generally, but receipts were given by the treasurer as for rent. On that day a sum of money was paid by the W. Union to the C. Union as a balance for the furniture, etc. in the workhouse. In Jan. 1841 the Poor Law Comrs. made an order, which recited that the premises in question had, under the order of Sept. 17, become convertible to the use of the W. Union, & had since been used & occupied by the poor of such Union, & directed the guardians of the W. Union to pay to the treasurer of the C. Union a yearly rent as compensation for the use of the premises. This order appeared to have been acted on by both parties:—Held: under the circumstances the occupation of the workhouse by the W. Union must be referred to the order of the Comrs., which must be presumed to have been communicated to the C. Union, & not to any contract creating the relation of landlord & tenant between the parties.—WOODBRIDGE UNION GUARDIANS v. COLNEIS & CARLFORD HUNDREDS GUARDIANS (1849), 13 Q. B. 269; 18

There was also a count for use & occupation, to which they pleaded payment of all the rent due before C.'s marriage. 2030. — After giving notice to quit.]—To a declaration for rent of a coal mine, deft. pleaded a determination of the tenancy by notice, & pltf. replied a waiver of such notice, which was denied:—Held: it was properly left to the jury to say whether a continuance to work the mine for a short time after the expiration of the notice, was intended by defts. as a waiver of the notice.

No continuance of the tenancy is necessarily implied from the mere fact of a tenant's continuing in possession after the expiration of a notice to quit given by such tenant.—*JONES v. 2031. Holding over after determination of lessor's interest.—Payment of rent.]—Tenant for life makes a lease for years to commence on a certain day & dies before the expiration of the lease in the middle of the year. The remainder man receives rent from the lessee, who continues in possession, but not under a fresh lease, for two years together, on the days of payment mentioned in the lease. This is evidence from which the ct. will presume an agreement between the remainder man & the lessee that the lessee should continue to hold from the day & according to the terms of the original demise, so that notice to quit ending on that day is proper.—ROE d. JORDAN v. WARD (1789), 1 Hy. Bl. 97; 126 E. R. 58.

2032. — —.]—A. let land to B. on a tenancy from year to year, which B. continued to hold for several years after A.'s title had determined, paying rent to A., & he at length gave up possession on a notice to quit from A. Subsequently to the determination of A.'s title, but before B. had given up possession, B. underlet to C. C. paid rent to B. as long as B. continued to hold, but paid no rent to any one subsequently. In an action of ejectment brought by A. against C. after B. had given up possession:—Held: it might be presumed, as a matter of fact, that a new tenancy from year to year had been commenced by B. after A.'s title had ceased, & that C., therefore, could not dispute A.'s title.—LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO. v. WEST (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 553; 36 L. J. C. P. 245.

2033. — —.]—Wherever a tenancy for years comes to an end either by efflux of time, or by the death or end of title of the lessor, so that either he or his representative, or any independent owner of the demised hereditament, can without notice eject the tenant, & the person entitled to eject leaves the tenant in possession, & receives rent from him without explanation or stipulation, the person receiving the rent is to be assumed to have created a tenancy upon the terms on which the tenant held in the demise originally made to him; & the holding to be presumed is as of a tenancy from year to year according to the former holding of the tenant, & therefore commencing at a time corresponding to that from which he originally held.

Certain premises had been let by the tenant in fee on a lease expiring at Midsummer, 1866: at that date deft. was in occupation as tenant from year to year to the intermediate lessee, on a demise commencing at Michaelmas; the tenant in fee let the premises on a fresh lease to pltf., commencing at Midsummer, 1866: deft. continued in occupation & paid rent to pltf. Notice to quit at Midsummer was given by pltf. to deft., who refused to leave the premises. Pltf. having sued in ejectment:—Held: pltf. having allowed deft. to hold over, & having received rent as from year to year without explanation or stipulation, the inference was that there had been a tacit agreement that deft. should hold from year to year according to the terms of his former tenancy, that is to say, from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, the notice to quit at Midsummer was wrong, & pltf. must be non-suited.—KELLY v. PATTERSON (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 681; 43 L. J. C. P. 320; 30 L. T. 842.

2034 ii. — —.]—The implication

2035. ———.]—A tenant, whose lease expired at Midsummer, continued in possession after that day, but no agreement was made as to the kind of tenancy which was to exist between him & his landlord. He paid a quarter of a year's rent at Michaelmas, & then gave notice that he should quit at Christmas, which he did. The landlord brought an action for a quarter of a year's rent, said to become due at Lady Day:—Held: if a tenant held over, the landlord has a right to waive the trespass, & consider him as a tenant for a year.—BISHOP v. HOWARD (1823), 2 B. & C. 100; 3 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 293; 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 243; 107 E. R. 320.

Deft. became assignee of the term, & remained in possession after it had expired, paying rent to the lessor of pltf., who had become assignee of A.:—Held: the tenancy, after the expiration of the lease, was a tenancy from year to year, commencing from such expiration, & therefore a notice given Dec. 24, 1846, to quit June 24 next, was a good notice.—DOE d. BUDDLE v. LINES (1848), 11 Q. B. 402; 17 L. J. Q. B. 108; 10 L. T. O. S. 390; 12 Jur. 80; 116 E. R. 527.

2037. ——— Question of fact.]—An incorporated railway co. agreed by parol to take certain premises for a year. They occupied, & at the end of the year continued to occupy for another year, at the expiration of which period they removed their goods, without any previous notice to quit, but paid rent up to the end of the following quarter:—Held: they were not liable in an action for use and occupation for the remaining three quarters of a year, since they did not occupy during that period; & no tenancy could be inferred from the payment of rent, inasmuch as they could not contract except under seal.

The old doctrine was, that a tenant who held over after his term had expired, was a mere tenant at sufferance; but it is now considered that, when once he has paid rent, & it has been received by the landlord, it is a question for the jury, whether the former does not become, & the latter accept him as, tenant from year to year, & therefore whether the one is not bound to receive, & the other to give, a notice to quit in order to determine the tenancy (MARTIN, B.).—FINLAY v. BRISTOL & EXETER RY. CO. (1852), 7 Exch. 409; 7 Ry. & Can. Cas. 449; 21 L. J. Ex. 117; 155 E. R. 1008.

2038. ———.]—By an agreement dated in 1891 D. agreed to let & B. agreed to take a farm which was subject to tithe rentcharges for a term which expired on Oct. 11, 1898, at a rent of £150 per annum, & in addition, to pay any amount assessed or charged by way of tithe rentcharge. B. entered into possession & so remained until the issue of a writ on June 9, 1911, in an action by the owners claiming possession of the farm, having throughout the whole period repaid to D.'s agent the amounts paid by him for tithe rentcharge, but never having paid anything in respect of the £150 rent. B. pleaded his possession, & argued that, since by the Tithe Act, 1891, his agreement as tenant to pay the tithe rentcharge was void, no inference adverse to his title could be drawn from the fact of such payments having been made by him:—Held: even assuming that the tenant's obligation to pay tithe rentcharge was void, regard must be had to the continuance of the practice obtaining during the term of repaying the tithe rentcharges to the landlord's agent, & B. was not paying them as owner of R. Farm, but under the previous arrangement. The proper inference therefore, to be drawn, was that there was a new agreement in 1899 creating the relationship of landlord & tenant between the parties under a tenancy from year to year, & pltf.' title not being barred, they were entitled to a declaration of his title & an order for possession.—NEALL v. BEADLE (1912), 107 L. T. 646; 57 Sol. Jo. 77.

2039. ——— Term contained in agreement for lease—Lease not granted—Notice to quit.]—Landlord enters into an agreement with tenant, on Jan. 2, 1815, to grant the latter a lease for eight years of certain premises, the agreement to take effect from Oct. 10, 1814, from which time tenant had been in possession, yielding 2s. 6d. yearly, & in case he held over after the term, he was to pay 40s. per diem for every day he retained possession. The lease was never granted. At the expiration of the term tenant held over, after having been served with a nine months' notice, to quit at the end of the year for which he held, which should first happen after the expiration of half a year, from the date of the notice. He was then served with a written demand, of possession, & the same paper notified to him that if he did not yield quiet possession, an ejectment would be brought:—Held: the tenant was not to be treated as a tenant from year to year.—DOE d.

2064. — Growing interest in each successive year—As parcel of original contract.]—There frequently is an actual demise from year to year so long as both parties please. . . . The true nature of such a tenancy is that it is a lease for two years certain, & that every year after it is a springing interest arising upon the first contract & parcel of it, so that if the lessee occupies for a number of years, these years, by computation from the time past, make an entire lease for so many years, & that after the commencement of each new year it becomes an entire lease certain for the years past & also for the year so entered on, & that it is not a re-letting at the commencement of the third & subsequent years. We think this is the true nature of a tenancy from year to year created by express words, & that there is not in contemplation of law a recommencing or re-letting at the beginning of each year (per Cur.).—*GANDY v. 2068. Question of fact.]—Where a party is allowed to hold after the expiration of a tenancy by agreement, the terms on which he continues to occupy are matters of evidence rather than of law. 2069. —.]—(1) If a landlord chooses to let a tenant hold over after the expiration of his lease, the terms on which the tenant continues to hold are a question of fact for the jury.

(2) A remainderman is not bound by the terms made between a previous tenant for life & his tenant, merely by the receipt of rent from the tenant after the death of the tenant for life; some knowledge of the terms made, & some evidence of acquiescence in them, must be shown in order to bind him.

(3) He had . . . the ordinary right of a tenant holding an uncertain interest, to remove within a reasonable time such fixtures as in the trade of a nurseryman are in the nature of trade fixtures (WILLES, J.).

A person who holds a nursery ground as tenant has a right at the expiration of his tenancy to remove fruit trees & shrubs planted by him & which then in fact form part of his stock in trade; but this does not entitle him to cut down or remove plants which would only be destroyed by such a process, & would after it be of no use to him for the purpose of his trade; such mere waste as this is not allowed to him by the rule (WILLES, J.).—*OAKLEY v. 2075. — Terms imported by custom.—An outgoing tenant claimed an allowance from his landlord under the custom of the country for labour bestowed in tilling & sowing a certain portion of the land within the last year of his tenancy. The outgoing tenant had held the land for several years after the expiration of a lease, without coming to any fresh agreement. The lease contained a covenant by the tenant to spend & consume on the demised premises three parts out of four of the straw arising from them, & to leave the manure there at the end of the term to & for the use of the lessor, he paying the full price for the same:—Held: the tenant must be taken to have held under the terms of the expired lease as far as they were applicable to a tenancy from year to year, & the stipulation in it, as to leaving the manure at the end of the term, did not exclude parol evidence of the custom of the country allowing the outgoing tenant for the tillages & sowing claimed; that custom was imported into the lease by implication.—*HUTTON v. 2079. — — — — ——It is a question of fact in each case whether a tenant holding over on the expiration of the term granted by a lease does so upon the terms of the expired lease. If the true inference of fact is that the tenant holds over as tenant from year to year on the terms of an expired lease so far as those terms are applicable to such tenancy, in law there is constituted a new agreement to that effect between the parties. Where a tenant holds over on the expiration of a term, & the facts do not exclude an implied agreement to hold upon the terms of the old lease the law determines that he impliedly holds subject to all the covenants in the lease which are applicable to the new tenancy.

A tenant from year to year of a farm & buildings at a rent, who has not entered into any other express agreement with his landlord than as to the amount of the rent, is under an obligation implied by law to use & cultivate the land in a husbandlike manner according to the custom of the country, subject to Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908 (c. 28), & to keep the buildings wind & water tight; & the assignee of the reversion can at common law enforce this implied obligation against the tenant. Where therefore, a tenant of a farm & buildings under a lease containing express covenants by him, continued in occupation after the expiration of the term, the landlord & tenant agreeing that the terms of the old lease should not apply, but not agreeing upon the terms of the new tenancy except that there should be a yearly tenancy at a fixed rent, & the landlord assigned the reversion during the continuance of the tenancy, the assignee of the reversion was held entitled to sue the tenant for breaches of the above implied obligations which occurred after the assignment of the reversion.—*WEND V. 2080. — — — — — Whether includes terms necessarily applicable.—A tenant holding over after the expiration of a lease for years may be taken to hold upon any of the terms of such former lease which are consistent with a yearly tenancy. Whether he does hold on any of such terms or not is a question for the jury on the facts proved. A covenant in a lease for years ending at Michaelmas, that the tenant shall & may retain & sow forty acres of wheat on the arable land demised at the seed time next after the end of the term, & have the standing thereof till the harvest then next following, rent free, with the use of premises for the threshing, etc., till a day named, is a term which may be made incident to a tenancy from year to year.

When it is said that a party becoming tenant from year to year may be deemed to hold over on the terms of a prior lease for years, that cannot be confined to such terms as are necessarily incident to a yearly tenancy. . . . It must Def't. pleaded non assumpsit. There was no proof of any express promise; but it was proposed to establish an implied contract to hold on the terms of the old lease, by evidence of the continued occupation:—Held: it was necessary for pltf. to prove the terms of the old lease, & as, when produced, it could not be read for want of a stamp, pltf. must fail.—WALLISS v. term to pay all taxes, rates, tithes, assessments, impositions, & outgoings now payable or hereafter to become payable by, or to be imposed upon, either landlord or tenant in respect of the premises, except landlord's property tax." After the expiration of the term, while deft. continued in possession as tenant from year to year, the local authority required a payment from plffs. under Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57). Plffs. made the payment & sued deft. to recover the amount. Deft. contended that the covenant did not apply to a tenancy created by holding over, & that under Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), s. 18 (1), the matter must be referred to arb'n. & no action would lie:—Held: the covenant was not inconsistent with a tenancy from year to year, & as the covenant related to a matter collateral to the demise & lying outside the purpose of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923 (c. 9), plffs.' right of action was not taken away, & they were entitled to recover.—*LOWTHER v. 2098. — Provisions as to rights & liabilities of tenant at end of tenancy—Proviso inconsistent with custom.—One of the covenants in an expired lease was, that the tenant on quitting the farm "should not sell or take away any of the manure in the fold, but should leave it to be expended on the land by the landlord or his succeeding tenant." The custom of the country was similar, with this addition, that by it an outgoing tenant was entitled to be paid for the manure left:—Held: as by the lease an express stipulation on the subject was made, the custom was excluded, & an outgoing tenant who held under the terms of the lease, was not entitled to recover for the manure.—*ROBERTS v. After the death of the tenant for life the co-exor. assigned the reversion of the estate for one thousand years. The lessee continued to pay rent to the assignees of the reversion, & gave six months' notice to quit:—Held: this furnished evidence that the lessee held over upon the terms of the original agreement, & was bound by the covenant to repair.—*WYATT v. there was no apportionment of the rents between devisee for life & first remainderman.

A tenancy from year to year created by tenant in fee is not determined by the death of a tenant for life claiming under tenant in fee, the original lessor.

A tenant from year to year has a lease for a year certain, with a growing interest, during every year thereafter, springing out of the original contract & parcel of it.—CATTLEY v. ARNOLD, *BANKS v. SECT. 7.—WEEKLY, MONTHLY AND OTHER PERIODIC TENANCIES.

SUB-SECT. 1.—NATURE OF.

2109. Weekly tenancy—Effect of collateral stipulation—Enlarging term on happening of event.]—Pltfs., a railway co., let premises, through an agent, to defts., on the terms, which were reduced to writing & signed by both parties, of a weekly tenancy to be determined by a week's notice on either side. At the same time the agent wrote, signed, & handed to defts. the following memorandum: "You may have the premises as per agreement until the railway co. require to pull them down." Defts. took possession of the premises, & pltfs., who subsequently required them for their own occupation, but had no intention of pulling them down, gave defts. a week's notice to quit, & after the notice had expired brought ejectment. Defts. pleaded that pltfs. did not require the premises in order to pull them down, & by counterclaim, asked for a declaration that the representation by the agent was binding upon pltfs., & for an injunction restraining them from acting upon the notice or determining the tenancy until they required the premises for the purpose of pulling them down:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to maintain the action, & defts. were not entitled to any of the equitable relief claimed.—CHESHIRE LINES COMMITTEE v. LEWIS & Co. (1880), 50 L. J. Q. B. 121; 44 L. T. 293; 45 J. P. 404, C. A.

2110. —Whether a reletting at beginning of each successive week.]—Pltf. was injured by reason of the defective & dangerous condition of a plate of a coal cellar belonging to a house which had been let on a tenancy from week to week by deft. to the tenant for about two years before the accident occurred. Pltf. brought her action for damages, & the county ct. judge before whom it was tried non-suited her, on the ground that deft. was not liable unless it could be proved that the premises were in the dangerous & defective condition complained of at the beginning of the demise, which proof was not forthcoming at the trial:—Held: a new trial ought to be granted, as a weekly tenancy was a re-letting by the landlord at the beginning of each successive week; & if his premises were in a defective condition at the beginning of the week in which pltf. was injured, the landlord would be liable to her in damages.—SANDFORD v. CLARKE (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 398; 57 L. J. Q. B. 507; 59 L. T. 220; 52 J. P. 773; 37 W. R. 28, D. C.

2111. —Pltf. was injured through a defect in the condition of a coal plate in the pavement in front of a house let by deft. on a weekly tenancy. The evidence showed that the defect had existed for some months before the accident, but was conflicting as to whether the accident was owing to the neglect of the tenant to secure the plate properly, or to the defective state of the flagstone, or to the presence of clay, which prevented the plate from fitting. The county ct. judge directed a verdict for pltf., the amount of damages being agreed. On appeal:—Held: a weekly tenancy does not determine without notice at the end of each week, but some notice is required to determine such a tenancy, the continuance of the tenant's occupation on the expiration of each week did not render deft. liable for defects then existing, as if there had been a reletting, it was a question for the jury whether the injury was caused by the negligence of the tenant, or by a structural defect existing at the date of the original letting, for which deft. would be liable, & there must be a new trial.—BOWEN v. ANDERSON, [1894] 1 Q. B. 164; 58 J. P. 213; 42 W. R. 236; 38 Sol. Jo. 131; 10 R. 47, D. C.

2115. — Reservation of weekly rent—“Rent not to be raised” during continuance of lessor’s interest.]—On Jan. 11, 1900, a shop demised to pltf. under a written agreement as follows, “I shall be pleased to accept you as tenant for barber’s shop at the rental of 7s. per week, the rent not to be raised during my present tenancy.” The landlord was the lessee of the shop under a lease which would expire on June 24, 1901:—Held: pltf. was not a mere tenant from week to week, but was entitled to a term which would expire on June 24, 1901.—ADAMS v. CARNS (1901), 85 L. T. 10; 17 T. L. R. 662, C. A.

2116. Quarterly tenancy—Tenancy “always to be subject to three months’ notice.”]—Where premises are taken under an agreement by which the “tenant is always to be subject to quit at three months’ notice,” this constitutes a quarterly tenancy, which may be determined by a three months’ notice to quit, expiring at the same time of the year it commenced, or any corresponding quarter day. But although the tenant under such an agreement enters in the middle of one of the usual quarters, if there appears to be no agreement to the contrary, he will be presumed to hold, from the day he enters; & the tenancy can only be determined by a notice expiring that day of the year, or some other quarter day calculated from thence.—*KEMP v. P. occupied for one year & nine months, & was assessed to & paid rates:—Held: this not a renting for one whole year at least, & P. had not gained a settlement by renting within 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 2.—R. v.

At the expiration of any such notice, G. shall leave the premises, with the fixtures, in as good condition as the same now are”:—Held: the agreement created a half-yearly tenancy, commencing from June 24, 1841, which might be determined by a six months’ notice to quit, expiring at Christmas. — *DOE d. 2126. ——— Proviso against joint tenancy.]—Lease to two, habendum to them for their lives, & the life of the longest liver, successively one after the other & not jointly, is no joint tenancy, but they must take in succession.—ANON. (1577), 3 Dyer, 361 a; 73 E. R. 809.

2127. ———.]—A lease is made to A., B. & C. for their lives, "proviso & it is covenanted & granted that the second shall not occupy during the life of the first, & the third shall not occupy during the life of the second." This is but a collateral covenant, which shall not alter the estate given by the premises. Adjudged for pltf. that it is a joint estate, & that the proviso shall not sever it.—SCOVILL v. 2129. Grant in remainder—Acceptance of rent from remainderman.]—If husband & wife make a lease for life, rendering rent, remainder for life, the husband dies, the wife accepts the rent, if she shall oust him in remainder after the death of the first lessee, is the question. It seems that she shall not, because the whole is but the same estate, & by her acceptance she affirmed the whole, for she agreed to it, & an agreement cannot be to part of an estate, & not to the residue.—ANON. (undated), Plowd. Queries 44; 75 E. R. 920.

2130. ———.]—Lease is made to husband & wife for their lives, remainder to A., their son, for life, & if he die, living the husband & wife, that then it shall remain to B. another of their sons for life, si ipse vellet inhabitare, etc. This is a good remainder on contingency, viz. if A. dies before the husband & wife.—COLTHIRST v. 2137. ———.]—The agent of the owners of a house signed a document by which he purported to "have let" the house to deft. at a weekly rental, & which continued: "I agree not to raise Mr. A. any rent as long as he lives in the house & pays rent regular. I shall not give him notice to quit. Any time Mr. A. wishes to move out, I promise to return to him the £6 he has paid me on taking possession of the house." Pltfs., treating deft. as a weekly tenant, gave him notice to quit, & brought this action to recover possession of the house:—Held: the document could not, having regard to its terms, be treated as creating a weekly tenancy, & whether it purported to be an attempt to create an immediate demise for the life of deft., which was void at law as not being by deed, or an agreement to grant a lease for the life of deft., he was entitled to specific performance.—ZIMBLER v. 2144. Lease for lives of lessee & others.]—(1) A lease is made to a man for the lives of S. & D., the lessee makes a lease for the life of S. only, it seems that he hath the reversion, notwithstanding this lease, for he has given a lesser estate than he had, for he claimed for the term of their two lives, & of the longest liver of them, & he has not given the whole estate.

(2) If land is leased to me during my life & the life of S. this is but for my life only, for that is the greater estate, which merges the other life.

(3) If a lease is made to two for forty years, if they so long live, & the one dies, the whole term ceases, for it was a condition, & not a limitation of the estate.—ANON. (undated), Plowd. Queries 11; 75 E. R. 872.

2145. —.]—Here the greater estate precedes the lesser; I hold that a lease made to one for his life, the remainder to him for another's life, is good, for he may it grant over: & so I think in this case, that so long as any of the lives remain living, that the estate remains (GAWDY, J.).—*ROSSE v. A lease to one for life habendum to his three sons successively, but omitting to mention them in the premises of the deed, shall be for the life of the father only, & the sons shall not take in possession nor by way of remainder; nor can there be an occupant to such an estate.—WINDSMORE v. HUBBARD (1587), Cro. Eliz. 58; 78 E. R. 319.

2149. Ultra vires lease for lives—Covenant for quiet enjoyment.]—A. being seised in fee of an estate, by lease & release executed upon his marriage, settled same upon himself for life, remainder to his first & other sons in tail, with a power to the tenant for life to grant leases for years, determinable on three lives. A. afterwards granted a lease of part of the estate in question for the lives of three persons therein named, & the life of the survivor; & there was a covenant that the lessee should quietly hold & enjoy the premises for & during the term, without interruption of the lessor, his heirs or assigns, or any other person, claiming any estate, right, or interest by, from, or under him or any of his ancestors. The lease being for three lives absolutely, was not conformable to the power, & became void on the death of A., & his eldest son brought an ejectment & evicted the lessee, two of the cestuis que vie being then living:—Held: (1) the eldest son was a person claiming under the lessor within the meaning of the covenant for quiet & enjoyment; (2) by the words, during "the term" in that covenant, the parties intended a term to continue so long as any of the cestuis que vie survived, & not a term to continue only for the life of the grantor.—EVANS v. VAUGHAN (1825), 4 B. & C. 261; 6 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 319; 3 L. J. O. S. K. B. 213; 107 E. R. 1056.

2150. Demise to A. for three lives—One life not in being at date of deed—Lease valid as to two lives.]—By an indenture of lease certain premises were demised to M. & her heirs, habendum to her & her heirs for & during the natural lives of M.'s son, J., her daughter, M., & A.'s granddaughter, & the life of the survivor of them. A. had a daughter, but he had not any granddaughter at the time of making the indenture, nor previously thereto, though subsequently he had several granddaughters:—Held: the lease was good for the lives of J. & M. only.—DOE d. PEMBERTON v. EDWARDS (1836), 1 M. & W. 553; 2 Gale, 137; Tyr. & Gr. 1006; 5 L. J. Ex. 258; 150 E. R. 555.

covenants in the indenture mentioned, & without being compelled or compellable or liable to pay any part of the fine or fines that should be paid on such renewal." Two of the lives having dropped, the grantee of the letters patent applied for a renewal. The Duchy demanded for such renewal a fine which was found by a special verdict to have been a reasonable fine, if such fine ought to be calculated on the annual value of the premises taken at rack rent, two & a half & three years' value:—Held: (1) this was a proper mode of valuation, & the fine not unreasonable; & the lessor, having declined to pay such fine, had failed to perform his covenant to do his utmost endeavours to procure a renewal of the letters patent; (2) the above was a covenant running with the land; & the fact of plff. being assignee only of a part of the interest created by the lease, did not preclude him from suing for & recovering damages in respect of the breach of covenant.—*SIMPSON v. 2163. Whether personal to covenantor.—If a leasehold interest is assigned by way of mtge., the assignee, unless there is a special provision to the contrary, takes the interest, subject to all the covenants & obligations of the original lessee.

B. having an interest in lands, which he held, subject to head rents, under the see of Kilmore, for terms of years, renewable periodically on the payment of fines, granted underleases at certain annual rents, & subject to fines for renewal; & he covenanted with the sub-lessees to renew the underleases as often as he should obtain renewals from the see of Kilmore, the sub-lessees paying all head rents & renewal fines. The interest in these underleases vested in R., who assigned & conveyed to a trustee his interest in the terms, together with other lands, to secure the payment of annuities which he had granted to F. The trust as to the leases was first to pay the rents & fines, & then the annuities. The interest of B. in the leaseholds was mortgaged & sold under a decree of foreclosure, & finally assigned to H. in Aug. 1814. In Sept. 1814, the interest of R. in the underleases was assigned to H., as purchaser, under a commission of bkpt. In such a case the covenant does not run with the land, but is personal, & the right under the lease to deduct the rent & fines is not merged by the union of the principal & underleases in the same person.—*HAIG v. entered into possession, but no lease was ever executed:—Held: (1) the option to purchase the freehold being unlimited as to time was void, under the rule against perpetuities, but that the option to purchase the lease, being in fact an option to call for a lease, was outside the rule against perpetuities, & was exercisable so long as the relationship of landlord & tenant existed; (2) an option to call for a lease was outside the rule against perpetuities, although the terms of the new lease were not the same as the terms of the original lease.

It is not disputed that under the authorities a covenant for what is called the renewal of a lease is outside the rule against perpetuities (RUSSELL, J.).—HIDER v. FORD, [1923] 1 Ch. 541; 92 L. J. Ch. 565; 129 L. T. 347; 67 Sol. Jo. 484.

L. purchased C.'s interest in the premises, & knew that S. was in possession under an agreement, but, till early in 1897, was not aware of the clause giving the option of renewal. At the expiration of the three years L. commenced an action of ejectment, & S. counter-claimed for specific performance of the agreement to renew:—Held: (1) L., as purchaser, must be fixed with notice of the contents of the agreement with S.; (2) the words in the agreement relating to the renewal were sufficiently definite to enable a decree for specific performance to be made to grant a renewal agreement for a lease for the same period & on the same terms, except as to renewal, as contained in the agreement of Aug. 30, 1894.—LEWIS v. 2197. Insertion by lessor of own life.]—If a lease for ninety-nine years determinable on three lives be conveyed in trust for A. for life, & A. covenant to use his utmost endeavours, as often as any of the persons on whose lives the premises are held, shall die, to renew same by purchasing of the lord of the fee a new life in the room of such as shall fail, it is no breach of the covenant, if, upon one of the lives failing he procure a renewal upon his own life.—SCUDAMORE v. 2199. Demand for renewal by lessor—On whom made.]—Where the tenant has assigned his whole interest by way of mtge., of which no notice is given to the landlord, but remains in possession, a demand on him to renew is sufficient, & if payment of the fine is unreasonably neglected, neither the mtgor. nor mtgee. can come to equity for relief. The demand ought not to be made, at the option of the landlord, on the tenant or his assign, but on him whom the landlord would, under existing facts, reasonably consider as the person entitled to ask for a renewal (LORD WENSLEYDALE).—GALBRAITH v. COOPER (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 315; 11 E. R. 450, H. L.

2200. Enforcement of performance—Specific performance.]—A lease contained a covenant by the lessor to grant a further lease, & a stipulation that the lease should be prepared by the lessor's solr. The lessor's solr. raised various untenable objections, & put the lessee to considerable expense. The lessee required the lessor to pay the costs occasioned thereby, & threatened to file a bill for specific performance of the covenant. The lessor then wrote, withdrawing all his objections, but refused to pay the costs occasioned by them. The pltf. filed his bill the day after:—Held: deft.'s same for six years. The lessee exercised his option of leasing for the longer term:—Held: he was entitled to an additional six years.—SMITH v. BARNITT (1893), 12 N. Z. L. R. 419, N. Z.

solr. was bound to prepare a proper lease, & deft. was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, & of the dispute occasioned by deft.—MAPPIN v. SAVORY (1869), 20 L. T. 777.

2201. Effect of subsequent notice to determine by lessor.—By an indenture of lease dated June 12, 1912, certain premises were demised for a term of twenty-one years from Mar. 25, 1910, to deft. at a rent of £65 for the first seven years & of £75 for the last seven years of the term. It was provided that the tenancy should be determinable at the end of the first seven or fourteen years by either party on giving to the other six months' previous notice in writing, expiring at the end of either of such periods of seven or fourteen years, & it was also provided that if the lessee should give six months' notice to the lessor prior to the expiration of the term of twenty-one years that he desired a further lease of the premises for a term of seven years, the lessor would grant a further lease of the premises accordingly, the lease to be in the same form as the existing lease with such modifications as the lessor's solrs. might approve & to be considered as commencing on Mar. 25, 1931, at the rent of £80. By a notice dated Aug. 20, 1923, deft. gave notice to pltf. that he was desirous of exercising his option to have a further term granted to him of seven years, & on Aug. 23, 1923, pltf. gave deft. notice to determine the tenancy as from Mar. 25, 1924. This summons was issued for a declaration that the tenancy created was duly determined on Mar. 25, 1924, by the notice of Aug. 23, 1923, notwithstanding that deft. had by the notice of

Aug. 20, 1923, expressed his desire to have a further lease for the term of seven years from Mar. 25, 1931:—Held: the clause in the lease giving the lessee an option to have a further term of seven years was subject to the operation of the clause giving either party power to determine the term at the end of the first seven or fourteen years, & it would not be a reasonable construction that though the lessor had determined the term in 1924 the lessee still had a right to demand a reversionary lease for seven years commencing from Mar. 25, 1931.—STEWART v. MASSETT (1924), 132 L. T. 301; 69 Sol. Jo. 72.

B. Observance of Conditions by Lessee.

(a) In General.

2202. General rule.—A lessee had under his lease an option of renewal if he performed & observed all the covenants contained in the lease. The lessee was guilty of divers breaches of his covenants:—Held: the performance of the covenants was a condition precedent to the lessee's right to a renewal of the lease & the condition precedent not having been performed, he was not entitled to a renewal.—GREVILLE v. PARKER, [1910] A. C. 335; 79 L. J. P. C. 86; 102 L. T. 380; 26 T. L. R. 375, P. C.

2203. Breach of covenants entailing forfeiture—Right of lessor to refuse renewal.—A. granted a lease for twenty-one years to B. with a proviso determining the lease & giving A. a right of re-entry on non-performance of any of the covenants in the lease, & A. covenanted that at the end of the

r. —.—Where term severed.—A lease contained a covenant for renewal. Part of the leasehold premises were sold by the lessee & the balance became vested in appts. who gave the required notice for renewal as to their portion:—Held: the covenant could only be enforced for the whole of the lands & not for the part held by appts.—ALEXANDER BROWN MILLING & ELEVATOR CO. v. CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. (1910), 30 C. L. T. 335; 42 S. C. R. 407.—CAN.

a. —.—J.—Pltf. granted to the deft. a lease of premises for five years, with an option of renewal for a further term of five years "at a rental to be agreed upon by the lessor":—Held: no contractual obligation at all attached to the lessor in regard to renewal, the promise being illusory; & there was no implied term that in the absence of agreement the old rental should stand unaffected on the exercise by the lessee of the option, or that, on such exercise, the lessee should be under obligation to pay a rental which the ct. should fix as reasonable or which the ct. should fix as that which the lessor, acting bona fide, would, or ought to, have agreed to.—BEATTIE v. FINE, [1925] V. L. R. 363; 47 A. L. T. 19; 31 Argus L. R. 331.—AUS.

b. Covenant to renew or pay for improvements.—Where the lessor covenants for a renewal of the term, or in default for payment for improvements, the option rests with the lessor either to renew or pay for the improvements; & the lessee cannot compel a specific performance of the contract to renew.—HUTCHINSON v. BOULTON (1852), 3 Gr. 391.—CAN.

q. What amounts to exercise of option—Keys not returned to lessor—Sub-tenant of lessee continuing in possession.—Upon the expiry of a parol lease for a term certain, with an option in the lessee to renew for a fixed period, the facts that the keys of the demised premises were not delivered by the lessee to the lessor for two or three days after the expiry of the term, & that a sub-tenant of the lessee continued thereafter in possession of a portion of the premises, are not sufficient to constitute an exercise by the lessee of his option to renew.—LINDSAY v. ROBERTSON (1899), 30 O. R. 229.—CAN.

aa. Necessity for notice.—Under a covenant in a lease that the lessor would, at the expiration of the term thereby granted, grant another lease, "provided the lessee should desire to take a further lease of the premises," no notice or demand by the lessee is necessary. The existence in fact of a desire for the further lease is all that is essential, & that desire may be indicated by conduct & circumstances.—BREWER v. CONGER (1900), 27 A. R. 10.—CAN.

dd. Whether lessee entitled to have lands encroached upon included in new lease.—Held: the lessee could not claim to have lands encroached upon included in the new lease to be given him under the covenant for renewal, for under that covenant he would only be entitled to a lease of the lands actually comprised in the old lease.—TORONTO CITY v. WARD (1908), 18 O. L. R. 214; 13 O. W. R. 312.—CAN.

PART IX. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 9.—B. (a).

2203 i. Breach of covenants entailing forfeiture—Right of lessor to refuse renewal.—A breach of a covenant in a lease not to assign without leave causes a forfeiture of the right to renewal.—

Sect. 2.—Covenants and options for renewal: Subsect. 9, B. (a) & (b) i.]

term, if it should not be sooner determined by B.'s acts or defaults, he would grant to B. a lease for a further term of fourteen years. B. paid all his rent & continued in possession after the term had expired. A. then brought an ejectment against him for breaches of covenant during the term. B. filed a bill for a specific performance of the covenant to renew, & for an injunction to restrain the action. A. in his answer set up the breaches of covenant, & denied having had notice of them till after the end of the term. Motion for the injunction refused.

If during the existence of a lease, such a breach of covenant is committed by the tenant, as that a ct. of equity would not have interfered to prevent the landlord from taking advantage of the forfeiture of the lease, had he known of the breach & proceeded to determine the lease, he ought not to be placed in a worse situation after the expiration of the term than he would have been in had he known of the breach & availed himself of it before the term expired (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—THOMPSON v. GUYON (1831), 5 Sim. 65; 58 E. R. 262.

2204. Failure to work mines.—By release of Oct. 6, 1791, reciting that B., X., & Y. (X. & Y. not being parties to the deed) had proposed as co-partners to accept a lease of the premises, for the purpose of getting the minerals thereunder, & making iron thereon; A. a mtgee., & B. the owner of the equity of redemption, conveyed the premises with the mines, etc., to C. upon trust, to demise same to B., X. & Y. for forty-two years, & upon further trust, at the request of the lessees, to execute a further lease for twenty-one years, & upon the execution of the lease to reconvey to A. & B. By a deed of Oct. 7, C. demised the premises to B., X. & Y. for forty-two years, reserving as the surface rent, £100, & certain royalties in respect of the minerals; & C. covenanted with the lessees to execute a further lease for twenty-one years; & the lessees covenanted among other things, "that the mines should be fairly got & regularly worked to as little disadvantage as possible to C., his exors., etc." By a deed of Oct. 8, C. conveyed to A. the premises & the accruing rents, subject to the lease, & reserving to C. a power to grant the further lease. In 1796, B. conveyed the reversion in fee in the mines to M. & T. as tenants in common. The mines were worked & royalties paid till 1815, at which time it was admitted the mines were "drowned out." The surface was occupied by the ptfs. with iron works, & the rent of £100 regularly paid to the parties entitled up to the present time. On June 21, 1833, the lessees applied to M. & T. to concur in the grant of the further lease; & on July 3, M. & T. declined to comply, denying the right of the lessees. On June 27, 1836, the assignees of the lease filed their bill, stating the trust in C., & the covenant to renew, & praying a specific performance of the covenant as to the mines:—Held: (1) the laches of ptfs. in filing their bill would, if the case depended on the covenant alone, have been a bar to the relief; (2) under the covenant, "that the mines should be fairly got & regularly worked," etc., the lessees were bound to continue the working, if practicable; & an issue must be directed, as to whether the "drowning out" of the mines, or their continuance in that state, was by any default of ptfs. Seem: if it were not, the ct. would not refuse specific performance.—WALKER v. JEFFREYS (1842), 1 Hare, 341; 11 L. J. Ch. 209; 6 Jur. 336; 66 E. R. 1064.

2205. Form of notice to renew.—Notice to be in writing.—By memorandum in writing, A. granted to B. a lease for the term of three years, & agreed, upon B. giving him notice in writing within three months after the expiration of the lease, to grant him a new lease for a further term. At the expiration of the three years, B. applied to A., but whether or not in writing did not appear, for a new lease, & the solrs. of A. & B. prepared a draft of the intended lease. In consequence of some difference as to the terms, B. refused to accept the lease. On bill filed by A. for specific performance:—Held: B., having by his answer admitted the demand of a lease, but not having expressly set up Stat. Frauds, was bound to accept a lease, although his demand might not have been in writing.—BEATSON v. NICHOLSON (1842), 6 Jur. 620.

2207. —.—In a lease for twenty-one years was contained a covenant, on the part of the lessor, upon the expiration of the term, provided all arrears of rent should then have been paid, & all the covenants performed, at the request in writing of the lessee, to grant a lease for a further term of twenty-one years, & so from time to time upon the expiration of every subsequent term of

f. —.—[—A lease contained a covenant for renewal on notice "if the lessees shall have duly & punctually observed & performed all the covenants of the lease." Rent had been paid irregularly, but was fully paid at the time the notice of desire to renew was given:—Held: the lessee, having failed to comply with the condition precedent of duly & punctually paying the rent at the times specified, had lost his right to call on the lessor to twenty-one years, provided such request in writing should be given. The lease contained covenants to repair & insure. At the expiration of the first term, a renewed lease was granted for twenty-one years, with a similar covenant for renewal. Upon the expiration of this second term, some buildings erected by the lessee were out of repair & required to be rebuilt; & during the term the property had been left for four days uninsured. All arrears of rent were paid; & a request was made to the lessor to grant a renewed lease, but this was refused. In a suit by the lessee for specific performance of the covenant for renewal:—Held: in consequence of the breach of the covenant to repair, the lessee was not entitled to a renewal of the lease.—*JOB v. The lessee applied for a renewal of his lease, but the lessor refused to grant such renewal, on the ground that the covenants had not been fulfilled either at the date of the six months' notice or at its expiration:—Held: the performance of the covenants was a condition precedent to the lessee's privilege of having a renewed lease, & the requisite painting & repairs not having been completed either when the six months' notice was given or when it expired the lessee was not entitled to a renewal of his lease. BASTIN v. BIDWELL (1881), 18 Ch. D. 238; 44 L. T. 742.

i. In General.

2210. Application must be made within time—Application to be made at stated periods.—A. & B. covenant in a lease for sixty-one years, "That at any time within one year after the expiration of twenty years of the term of sixty-one years, upon the request of the lessee, & his paying £6 to the lessors, they would execute another lease of the premises unto the lessee, for & during the further term of twenty years to commence from & after the expiration of the term of sixty-one years, etc.; & so in like manner at the end & expiration of every twenty years during the term of sixty-one years, for the like consideration, & upon the like request, would execute another lease for the further term of twenty years, to commence at & from the expiration of the term then last before granted, etc." Under this covenant the lessee cannot claim a further term of twenty years, at the expiration of the last term of twenty years in the lease, if he has omitted to claim a further term at the end of the first & second twenty years in the lease.—*RUBERY v. 2214. —.—.—]—(1) Covenant for perpetual renewal. Specific performance refused under circumstances: Laches; & alterations of the property, so that it could not be enjoyed according to the stipulations.

Upon the question whether this is a covenant under the qualifications belonging to it for perpetual renewal the etc., whatever might be its inclination upon ambiguous words, would not be justified in saying this is not clearly, providing the terms are all properly complied with, a covenant for perpetual renewal, in terms the most express (LORD ELDON, C.).

(2) I shall not notice the cases further than by observing, that there is a great distinction between this and the cases upon leases for lives; & that where there has been default of this kind in making a request, unless it has been excused by circumstances, there is no authority for decreeing a specific performance; & in one case, Allen v. Hilton, No. 2213, ante, the want of such request prevented it; admitting that great stress was in that instance laid upon the nature of the subject demised; & if the general rule is: that the request is not of the essence of the contract, the nature of the subject, especially a colliery, might make a difference; for it is most material to the lessor to know three months before the expiration of the lease whether the tenant is to continue (LORD ELDON, C.).—*LONDON (CITY) v. 2215. —.—.—]—A lease was declared to commence "as to the houses & grass at Whitsunday, & as to the arable land, at the separation of the crop from the ground." It was to last for nineteen years, perpetually renewable on requisition, to be made twelve months before its expiration:—Held: the expiration of the lease was at Whitsunday, 1861; the requisition for renewal ought to have been made at or prior to Whitsunday, 1860; & consequently a requisition postponed till Aug. 1, 1860, though before "the separation of the crop from the ground," was too late.

PART IX. SECT. 2. SUB-SECT. 9.—B. (b) i.

h. Application not made within time—Holding over must be with lessor's permission.—GUARDIAN REALTY CO.

Sect. 2.—Covenants and options for renewal: Sub-sect. 9, B. (b) i. & ii.]

The lease, if its expiration were at the separation of the crops, would not have a certain & definite termination, but separate endings, as to different & unknown portions of the arable lands at different & uncertain periods; & consequently there would be no possibility of computing either the beginning or the ending of the last year, & no certainty as to the day when the notice of renewal ought to be given, or when it would expire (LORD WESTBURY, C.).

Looking at the object of this provision, that the owner should renew on a demand, giving twelve months' time before the expiry of the term, I cannot feel a doubt that the true meaning is, that the landlord should have twelve months to look out for another tenant, to whom he might give possession of the house & grass at Whitsunday, & the arable when the previous crop is taken away (LORD WENSLEYDALE).

It appears to me that the term of nineteen years expired at Whitsunday, 1861; that the period between Whitsunday & the separation of the crop from the ground was not a continuance of the term, but only a continuance of the possession (LORD CHILMSFORD).—WIGHT v. HOPETOUN (EARL) (1864), 4 Macq. 729, H. L.

Annotation:—Reid, Black v. Clay, [1894] A. C. 368.

2216. — Informal notice sufficient.—A lease of household property was granted in the year 1818 to the trustees of an insurance co. for twenty-one years at a rent of £100, with a covenant that the lessor, his heirs or assigns, could from time to time, at any time before the expiration of the term, & also before the expiration of every succeeding term to be granted by every future or renewed lease, whenever required by the lessees or the person interested in the term, or any succeeding term, & upon payment of a fine or premium of £1,000, grant a renewed lease for twenty-one years, & in every such new lease there should be a similar covenant for renewal at or before the end of every twenty-one years, it being the intention of the parties that this lease should be renewable for ever at the option of the lessees, their exors., administrators, or assigns; & there was a covenant by the lessees that in case the option to renew was not exercised they would before the expiration of the term rebuild or reinstate the buildings & premises as a dwelling-house. There were two renewals of the lease, one in 1839 & one in 1860, which last lease expired on June 24, 1881. The persons then entitled under the original lessor were G., who was tenant for life of a moiety of the property, & three trustees, of whom G. was one, of the entirety subject to the life interest. Under arrangements made by the insurance co. this lease with other property was vested in five trustees upon trust to indemnify a certain class of stockholders & subject thereto for the co. One H. was secretary to these trustees & also to the co., & it was his duty to attend to the renewal of the lease. On June 23, 1881, G. gave notice to H. that the lease would expire on the following day. H. answered that the directors of the co. "would of course renew the lease." Subsequently renewal was refused. In an action for specific performance:—Held: it was not necessary for the lessees to pay the fine of £1,000 or execute a new lease before the expiration of the term, but it was necessary that notice of an intention to renew should be given before the end of the term; & the informal notice by H. to G. was sufficient. Specific performance decreed, with payment of the premium & interest at £5 per cent. from the end of the prior lease.—NICHOLSON v. SMITH (1882), 22 Ch. D. 640; 52 L. J. Ch. 191; 47 L. T. 650; 31 W. R. 471.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 149 (6).

2217. Wilful concealment of death of one life.—Where a lessee wilfully conceals the death of any of the cestuis que vie, & acts under such concealment for his own advantage, the lessor is not obliged to renew, but may take advantage of the forfeiture, & enter upon & hold the estate.—PENDRED v. GRIFFITH (1744), 1 Bro. Parl. Cas. 314; 1 E. R. 590, H. L.

2218. Failure to apply on death of life—Application on death of second life.—Under a covenant in a corp. lease to renew, upon the falling in of one life for ever, there is no equity to extend it to the case where two are suffered to fall in, although a compensation is offered.—BAYLEY v. LEOMINSTER CORPN. (1792), 3 Bro. C. C. 529; 1 Ves. 476; 29 E. R. 683, L. C.

2219. ——In a lease for a term of years determinable on the deaths of three persons, it was covenanted that on the death of either of the lives, the lessee should, within twelve months, renew, & pay a fine of nine guineas; & each party bound himself unto the other in a penalty of eighteen guineas, to renew, & to grant & take the new lease respectively; two of the lives died before the lessee made his application to renew, when he offered to pay the fines & a penalty, but the owner of the land refused to renew:—Held: (1) no accident will entitle a party to renew, unless it could not have been avoided by reasonable diligence; (2) the penalty did not give an option to the lessee, & a direction given by a former owner in his will to renew, only left the trustees to do what testator himself would have done; (3) if the lessee omit to renew on the death of the first life, he is not entitled to renew on the death of the second life.—REID v. BIAGRAVE (1831), 9 L. J. O. S. Ch. 245.

2220. ——A lessor demised hereditaments to the lessee, his heirs & assigns, for the natural lives of the lessee & two other persons & the longest liver of them, with a covenant that the lessor, his heirs & assigns (upon the lessee, his heirs or assigns "surrendering this present demise as hereinafter mentioned"), should at any time thereafter at the request of the lessee, his heirs or assigns, "as often as one or two life or lives of & in the hereditaments" should drop & be determined, renew & grant a further term "for any other life or two lives of any other person or persons to be nominated by the lessee, his heirs or assigns, in the stead of the person's life or lives so dropping or determining," the lessee, his heirs or assigns, paying to the lessor, his heirs or assigns, "for every such renewal for every life or lives of such person or persons so to be renewed as aforesaid the sum of 40s. only, & at the same time surrendering this present demise to be cancelled":—

2223 ii. ——PALMERSTON (LORD) v. DUBLIN CORPN. (1831), Lyne

Held: upon the true construction of the covenant the right of renewal was neither perpetual nor limited to one renewal for not more than two new lives, but was a right of renewal as often as any of the three original lives should drop, so that any such renewal might take place either on the dropping of any one of the three lives, or after the dropping of any two of them, as the lessee might from time to time request.

(2) There is no legal presumption against a right of perpetual renewal, but the burden of proof is on any one claiming such a right, which will not be inferred from equivocal expressions fairly capable of another construction.—SWINBUENE v. MILBURN (1884), 9 App. Cas. 844; 54 L. J. Q. B. 6; 52 L. T. 222; 33 W. R. 325, 11 L.

2221. — Ignorance of death of life.—The assignee of a lease for lives, which contained a covenant for renewal upon the dropping of any life, provided application were made within six months, having omitted, upon the death of one of the cestuis que vie, to apply for a renewal within the six months, filed his bill praying relief, upon the ground that he did not, within the six months, know that the person was dead, or that the deceased person was one of the cestuis que vie named in the lease. The bill was dismissed with costs; because plff. might have known the facts, if he had used reasonable diligence, & acted with ordinary prudence.—HARRIES v. BRYANT (1827), 4 Russ. 89; 38 E. R. 738.

2222. — Whether relieved in equity—Slight circumstances.—Where a lessor covenants for the perpetual renewal of a lease, upon the lessee's naming a new life, & paying a fine within a certain time after the death of any of the cestuis que vie; a ct. of equity will, upon slight circumstances, relieve the lessee against a forfeiture, for not literally complying with the terms of the covenant.—ROSS (EARL) v. At law a covenant must be strictly & literally performed: in equity it must be really & substantially performed according to the true intent & meaning of the parties, so far as circumstances will admit; but if by unavoidable accident, if by fraud, by surprise or ignorance not wilful, parties may have been prevented from executing it literally a ct. of equity will interfere, & upon compensation being made, the party having done everything in his power will give relief (ARDEN, M.R.).—EATON v. 2227. — — — — ——(1) Where on the dropping of one of the lives in a lease for three lives with a covenant for perpetual renewal repeated applications were made to the tenant to renew according to his covenant particularly in 1798 & 1796, & he made no offer to renew till 1804 or 1805, when some conversations took place respecting a renewal upon the tenants relinquishing a suit in equity which he was carrying on against his landlord, but which conversations ended without anything being done, & the landlord refused to renew:—Held: the tenant's right to a renewal was forfeited & the case was not one where relief could be granted under Tenantry Act, 1780 (c. 30).

(2) The character of a general agent is sufficient to authorise him to demand & receive the fines, payable on renewal of a lease.—MOUNTNOURIS (EARL) v. WHITE (1814), 2 Dow, 450; 3 E. R. 931, H. L.

2228. — — — — ——A lease for lives of lands in Ireland, renewable for ever, is not absolutely forfeited by extinction of all the lives & neglect to pay the fines for renewal, even after notice from the lessor. Under particular circumstances, as in the following case, the right of renewal may still exist & be enforced.

In a case where A. the heir of the lessee, having such right, had entered into an agreement with B. respecting an independent lease of the lands held under the renewable lease by the ancestor of A. which independent lease B. had obtained from the landlord when in a state of intoxication, & by circumvention:—Held: the heir of A. & purchasers for valuable consideration, claiming under him, were entitled in equity to the benefit of the agreement between B. & A., & the heir of the landlord (lessor) was entitled to the benefit of the same agreement, so far as B. took an interest.—BUTLER v. MULVHILL (1819), 1 Bli. 137; 4 E. R. 49, H. L.

Covenant in a lease for perpetual renewal, upon notice within one year next after the death of any, or either of the life or lives; informal notice about five years after the dropping of the first life, with an allegation of accident, & ignorance of rights, & a regular application after the determination of the second & third lives, both within one year:—Held: the lessee not entitled to a renewed lease determinable on either three, or two lives, with a similar covenant, but bill retained for a year with liberty to bring an action at law.—MAXWELL v.

2230. Suit pending to determine whether forfeiture incurred—Omission by lessee to give notice of renewal.—T. a tenant under a lease for nineteen years perpetually renewable on twelve months' previous notice before the expiration of each term, instituted a suit to compel L., the landlord, to renew from 1842 to 1861. In defence L. pleaded that the lease had been forfeited for breach of covenants. The suit, however, was allowed to stand still, & the parties then began to negotiate about a draft of a renewal, L. proposing alterations & threatening, if they were not accepted, he would insist on his original defence of forfeiture. Pending these negotiations, & the delay not being caused by T., the time arrived for T. giving notice of renewal of another term from 1861 to 1880, which T. did not give:—Held: while the lis pendens as to the existence of the former lease existed, T. was excused from making demand for a further renewal, & had not lost his right of renewal, it being inequitable in L. to insist on compliance with a covenant of which he denied the existence. HUNTER v. HOPETON (EARL) (1865), 13 L. T. 130; 29 J. P. 727, H. L.

SUB-SECT. 10.—RENEWAL ON SAME TERMS.

2231. Whether covenant for further renewal included.—(1) Lessor covenanted to renew the lease at the request of the lessee within the term; lessee did not request, but exors. did within the term; lessor was compellable to renew.

The exors. of every person are implied in himself, & bound without naming; & the meaning of this covenant was to the end the lessee might be reimbursed the money which he had laid out in the improvement of the premises, for which reason it is immaterial whether testator or the exors. required the renewal of the lease, it need not be personal (LORD MACCLESFIELD, C.).

(2) The request for the making of a new lease for fifty years is too much; for it might have been as well for a hundred or two hundred years; but the usual term for leasing being for twenty-one years let deft. demise the premises to plff. for twenty-one years or for any lesser term as plff. shall elect (LORD MACCLESFIELD, C.).

(3) Though the lease is to be made on the same covenants, yet that shall not take in a covenant for the renewing this new lease, forasmuch as then the lease would never be at an end (LORD MACCLESFIELD, C.).—HYDE v. SKINNER (1723), 2 P. Wms. 196; 24 E. R. 697, L. C.

In Sept. 1920, the parties signed a further indorsement agreeing "that this lease be extended for three years expiring Dec. 25, 1923." These indorsements, though duly stamped, were settled informally by the parties themselves without legal aid:—Held: on the construction of these documents, it was not intended to extend the lease 2238. Impossibility of lessees entering into original covenants—One lessee bankrupt.—A lease was granted to two, with a proviso for re-entry in case the rent should be in arrear for thirty days, or the tenants or either of them should become bkpt., or let, assign, or part with the premises, or any part thereof, without licence; or if the tenants should not keep the covenants, which were joint & several covenants, one of which was to keep the interior of the property in repair. The landlord covenanted that he would, at the expiration of the term, in case the covenants on the tenants' part should have been duly performed, grant to "the tenants, their exors. & administrators," a fresh lease, subject to the same covenants, provided the tenants or either of them, their or either of their exors. or administrators, should, twenty days before the end of the term, give the landlord notice of the desire to take such lease. One of the tenants became bkpt., shortly before which he assigned his interest in the lease to the other tenant. The landlord, with knowledge of this, received rent to the end of the term. The continuing tenant, twenty-one days before the end of the term, gave the landlord notice to grant the renewed lease to him. At this time the interior of the property required repairs to the amount of at least £13. The judge decided that the lease must be granted, the repairs required being only trifling:—Held: (1) the tenant was not entitled to a renewed lease, for that the granting it was subject to a condition precedent that the covenant of the lease should have been kept, which condition had not been performed, as there was a want of repair which, though not serious, constituted an existing breach of covenant when the new lease was applied for; (2) the agreement being to grant a lease to the two, who must enter into joint & several covenants, & both being alive the landlord could not be called upon to grant a lease to one only.—FINCH v. UNDERWOOD (1876), 2 Ch. D. 310; 45 L. J. Ch. 522; 34 L. T. 779; 24 W. R. 657, C. A.

notice in writing of their decision, the lessor should grant to the co. a further lease for seven years, "such lease to contain clauses so far as possible identical with the terms hereof including the covenant" by the three named guarantors "for payment of rent thereby reserved." One of the guarantors having died in 1917, the co., six months before the termination of the lease, gave the required notice & offered another guarantor in the place of the guarantor who had died, or to make a deposit, or to pay the seven years' rent in advance. The personal representatives of the lessor refused to grant the lease on the ground that the terms on which it was to be granted had become incapable of performance:—Held: the effect of the proviso was that the new lease was to contain a covenant by the three guarantors to pay the rent; having become incapable of performance the landlords could not be compelled to grant a different lease, even though the rent were equally well secured.—HOLLIES STORES, LTD. v. TIMMIS, [1921] 2 Ch. 202; 90 L. J. Ch. 485; 126 L. T. 18; 65 Sol. Jo. 735.

SUB-SECT. 11.—PERPETUAL RENEWAL.

A. Nature of Covenant or Agreement.

2240. Not a perpetuity.—In a lease the lessor covenants, that if, at the expiration of the term, the lessee should be desirous of taking a further lease, the lessor would grant such further lease, without any fine, & under the same rent & covenants only, as in this lease. A new lease is desired & prepared, but it contains a covenant to grant a further lease at the end of the new term; the lessor objected to this covenant, as being in the nature of a perpetuity upon his estate; but the objection was overruled.—BRIDGES v. HITCHCOCK (1715), 5 Bro. Parl. Cas. 6; 2 E. R. 498, H. L.

2242. Repugnant to tenancy from year to year.—A perpetual right of renewal is repugnant to a strict tenancy from year to year, but when a landlord & tenant agree that the latter is to have a tenancy for a year, with an option to continue from year to year by giving notice, & the context shows that the governing idea is a tenancy for a year certain, to be renewed as such a tenancy by the notice, then there is no strict tenancy from year to year, & the right of renewal is valid; in such a case the words "from year to year" in the lease for the lives of the two persons named in the former lease, & of such other person as B., his heirs, etc., should appoint in lieu of the person named in the preceding lease, as same should respectively die, under the same rent & covenants. There had been successive renewals from the time of a former lease granted by the ancestor of A.; & in each, a like covenant for renewal:—Held: A. & his ancestors had, by their own acts, construed this to be a covenant for a perpetual renewal.—COOKE v. 2253. — Original covenant not produced.]—S., on Jan. 5, 1746, being tenant in fee simple of lands in Tipperary, executed an indenture, which was, two days afterwards, registered under the Irish Registration Acts. The memorial represented that S. had, by the indenture, demised, or agreed to demise, these lands to C. for three lives therein named, with "a clause of renewal after the expiration of said lives therein before mentioned" provided that C., his heirs, etc., should "within six months from the death of the last of said three lives, nominate such life, or lives as he would have inserted," & pay all rent, & "the sum of £11 7s. 6d. for adding or renewing such life or lives for ever." The memorial was signed by C. alone & he registered it. In Feb. 1750, S. executed a settlement in contemplation of marriage, by which he made himself tenant for life only in the estate comprised in the indenture of 1746. In Mar. 1750, he executed a lease to C., in which the indenture of 1746 was recited, & in consequence of some changes in the lands a change was made in the rent. The lease recited the indenture as a demise to C. for three lives & the longest liver of them, with a covenant to "renew same for ever, on payment of £11 7s. 6d. for renewing same on the fall of every life, within six months next after the fall of each life." The habendum in the lease was for the same three lives; & S. covenanted that "upon the death or failure of the aforesaid life or lives, or any or either of them," naming them, & upon C., his heirs, etc., paying "the sum of £11 7s. 6d. above the annual rent, within the space of six calendar months, & immediately after the death or failure of such life," & on nomination, etc., "S. & his heirs," etc., would add the life so nominated; " & so in like manner from time to time successively for ever thereafter on the failure of every other several life or lives in the lease or thereafter to be nominated." newals had, from time to time, been made by the successors of S. in the estate, sometimes after proceedings in Chancery to compel same, sometimes without such proceedings; but in 1845, G., the descendant of S., having absolutely refused to renew, a bill was filed against him by B., who had become possessed of C.'s lease. The bill prayed for a renewal according to the lease, which B. alleged to have been made in conformity with, & under the obligation of, the indenture of 1746. This indenture could not be produced, but the memorial was tendered & received in evidence. Deft. alleged that the lease was ineffectual to bind the inheritance, as it was made by a person who was, at the moment of executing it, only tenant for life, & he contended that there was no legal evidence of the indenture of 1746. He also relied on the difference between the terms of renewal contained in the indenture & those contained in the lease:—Held: pltf. was entitled to the renewal as prayed; the memorial was properly admitted as secondary evidence of the indenture; that indenture was to be treated as an original lease, containing a covenant, under the obligation of which the lease of 1750 was executed; the obligation entered into in 1746 being by the tenant in fee simple, his performance of it in 1750 was valid, although he was then only tenant for life; & the acts of the successive tenants of the estate, though not evidence to prove the existence of the covenant, became, when the covenant had been otherwise proved, evidence of the construction which the parties interested had put upon it.—*SADLER v. the lessee, he planting trees in the room of them, to hold the premises, without impeachment of waste, to him, his exors., administrators & assigns, for ninety-eight years, at a rent therein mentioned, contained a covenant that the lessor, his heirs & assigns, should, upon request of the lessee, his exors., administrators & assigns, from time to time renew the lease, & perfect such other assurances as the lessee, his exors., administrators & assigns, should reasonably require for strengthening, confirming, & suremaking the demised premises, at such rents, & under such covenants & conditions, as in the lease were contained. Another covenant provided that, in case of eviction, or waste by rebellion, the rent should cease & be abated. A renewal of the lease, with all the covenants, was executed in 1739:—Held: the covenant was not for perpetual renewal, but for confirming & further assuring the original lease.

That a covenant for a perpetual renewal must be clear, plain, & distinct, & in terms that will not bear any other construction, is a proposition which is borne out by law, & sanctioned by a series of decided cases (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—*BROWNE v. The trustees' power was to lease at a rack rent for any term not exceeding twenty-one years. Before the expiration of W.'s lease new trustees had been appointed, & the reversion in fee had become vested in other persons, who would not renew the lease on the old fine, the property having much increased in value:—Held: the

The property afterwards became vested in the Ecclesiastical Comrs., who declined to renew the lease, but sold the reversion to the lessees in pursuance of Episcopal & Capitular Estates Act, 1851 (c. 104). Upon a bill filed by the underlessee to establish his rights in respect of the reversion so purchased:—Held: the lessees were quasi trustees of the reversion so purchased for the underlessee, but the right of the latter was not to have a perpetual renewal, but to purchase the reversion upon the terms of paying a due proportion of the consideration given by the lessees, & of the expense of purchasing the fee; & the lessees having offered before the filing of the bill to convey the reversion on fair & reasonable terms, pltf. was ordered to pay their costs.—*POSTLETHWAITE v. 2271. Covenant conditional on obtaining renewal — Renewal obtained in name of trustee for wife of lessee.]—A lessee of a house covenanted with his underlessee of a part of the house that in case he obtained an extension of the term or a renewal of his lease, he would give to underlessee a like renewal or extension of his underlease. A lease was subsequently taken from the ground landlord for an extended term in the name of a trustee for the separate use of the lessee's wife. On a bill by the underlessee against the lessee, his wife, & her trustee, charging that the extended lease had been taken in a trustee's name in order to defeat pltf.'s right under the lessee's covenant, & praying that the wife & her trustee might be decreed to grant an underlease to pltf. for the extended term:—Held: the lessee was under no obligation to endeavour to procure the renewal to himself, & as it appeared on the evidence that the person in whose name the extended lease was taken was in reality a trustee for the wife, pltf.'s bill must be dismissed with costs.—LUMLEY v. TIMMS (1873), 28 L. T. 608; 21 W. R. 404, C. A.

2272. — Whether binding on assigns of lessee.]—D., who was sub-lessee of certain premises, demised same to F. for the residue of the term then vested in him less the last days thereof, & covenanted for himself, his exors., administrators, & assigns, that in case he should obtain from the freeholder, his heirs or assigns, any extension of the term for which he then held the premises, then he, his exors., administrators, or assigns, would grant to F. a new lease for such extended term as would include the unexpired residue of the original term granted to F., & the further term less the last days thereof, which might be granted to D. by the freeholder, his heir or assigns. D. died, & his reversion became vested in deft., who surrendered his term to the freeholder & obtained from him a new lease for an extended term, subject to existing underleases. F. having died, pltf. acquired from his exors. his interest in the premises, & then claimed specific performance of D.'s covenant with F.:—Held: (1) on the construction of the covenant, it was personal to D. alone & did not bind his representatives; (2) the covenant was not strictly a covenant for renewal, & did not on that account run with the land; but assuming that it did run with the land, the doctrine of perpetuity had no application; (3) the covenant ran with the reversion which was vested in the covenantor at the time when he entered into the covenant; & consequently, 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, s. 2, did not apply.—*MULLER v. The consideration for the renewal is not stated in the memorial, but it was admitted at the bar, that £20 was the consideration for the agreement to renew the lease. That a young man, an expectant heir, should be induced by his father's attorney, for a consideration of £20 to ratify a lease which was void as against him, & also for the same consideration, to grant in reversion another lease for lives undefined, imports in itself a transaction so grossly fraudulent, that no ct. of equity could give its assistance to effectuate such an agreement (LORD MANNERS).—BLAKENEY v. J. survived testator, & devised his interest in the lease to his four sons, who took several renewals, & in 1782 assigned the existing lease, for a valuable consideration, to A. for repairs under an agreement for a lease for a term of twenty-one years is good consideration to sustain a 2288. ———.]—On a devise of successive interests in leases for lives or years, where testator directs that the leases are from time to time to be renewed, without more, the fines & expense of renewal are to be borne by the tenant for life & remainderman, or parties successively entitled, in proportion to their actual enjoyment of the estate, & not in proportion to an extent of enjoyment to be determined speculatively, or by a calculation of probabilities.

There is no difference in the rule as to the apportionment of fines for renewal between the devisees of successive interests in the estate, whether the leases are for lives or for years.

If testator provides a specific fund for the renewals, or directs that the renewals shall be raised or borne by the parties in a certain manner, or in certain proportions, such direction supersedes the general rule; but if trustees, having power to direct the manner in which the fines shall be raised, do not exercise the power, the ct. will pursue the general rule which would be adopted in the absence of any direction as to the manner of providing for the fines. Qu.: whether there is any difference in the rule of apportionment in cases where the parties take successive interests under wills, & in cases where such interests are taken under settlements by deed. Qu.: whether trustees, having power to raise the fines out of the rents & profits, or by mtge., or otherwise, as they should think fit, might so act as to throw the burden on the parties, in proportions different from those in which it would be distributed by the general rule of the ct.—*JONES v. 2289. ———.]—Where leases, which testator had directed to be renewed, were renewed by adding a cestui que vie, by means of a payment out of funds belonging to testator's estate, not charged with such renewal, & it was referred to the master to inquire what security the tenant for life of the leases ought to give, & to what amount, for the contribution which he might be liable to make for the benefit he should derive from the renewal, the master found, & the ct. had confirmed the finding, that the payment for the renewal ought to be secured by a policy of life insurance for the amount paid, in the name of the trustees, on the life of the new cestui que vie, the costs & premiums in respect of which ought to be paid out of the rents & profits of the estate to which the tenant for life was entitled: the ct. subsequently declared the policy of life insurance to be a security for the benefit which the tenant for life had derived, or might derive, from the renewal, or might have derived therefrom if another proper life had been inserted in lieu of his own.

Semble: the mode of providing the security adopted by the report is erroneous in principle; for the object of the ct. in requiring security to be given by the tenant for life in respect of the benefit which he may derive from the renewal of the lease, is, that the sum paid out of the capital shall be borne by the parties in proportion to the benefits which they derive; & the security therefore is for the purpose of bringing back to the capital so much as the tenant for life has had the benefit of; & this sum, which would be payable on the death of the tenant for life, is not properly secured by a policy of insurance on the life of another person, inasmuch as it throws upon the remainderman not merely the interest of the capital provided, but the burden of keeping up a policy of life insurance for the full amount; & it is mere speculation whether this burden will be compensated by giving him the benefit of a policy at a less rate of premium, owing to an earlier insurance of the life. Although it may be, that, when provision is made of a fund for renewal, the remainderman will not suffer, this is not the principle, for the principle is, that the remainderman ought to bear so much of the capital paid for renewal as may not be paid by the tenant for life under the security which he has given.

The ct. will not retain the income of the tenant for life, because he may become liable to give security for the payments on account of renewals, before the occasion for giving such security has arisen.—HUDLESTON v. WHELPDALE (1852), 9 Hare, 775; 68 E. R. 729.

formance of a covenant by the mesne landlord with his lessee for the renewal of the lease after the lessee has wilfully neglected or refused to renew; & the non-payment, after demand, of the fine which the mesne landlord has paid to the superior landlord amounts to such neglect or refusal. An under-lessee who is not himself bound to take a renewal of his lease, but who is entitled to the benefit of a covenant by his lessor for the renewal of his underlease, upon payment of his proportion of the fines & expenses of a renewal by the superior landlord, ought, if he complains of the amount of such proportion required from him by the mesne landlord, to apply without delay to a ct. of equity to assess the sum which he ought to pay, submitting himself to the jurisdiction of that ct., to compel him to pay a reasonable sum; & if instead of making such application, & after notice from his mesne landlord that the fine must be paid in a certain time or his right will be excluded, he should delay the payment, the objection that the sum demanded from him was unreasonable will not excuse his laches.—CHESTERMAN v. MANN (1851), 9 Hare, 206; 22 L. J. Ch. 151; 68 E. R. 476.

2304. — Necessity for demand.—Lease to A., for a term of years, at a yearly rent, & under & subject to the payment, at stipulated periods during the term, of certain sums of money in the nature of fines, with a covenant on the part of the lessor, at the end of the term, on due & punctual payment being made of the rent, & gross sums or fines, at the times appointed for payment thereof, to grant a further or renewed lease. A. assigned to B. a part of the premises, for the same term & interest as A. himself took under the lease, subject to the payment of a proportional part of the rent & gross sums or fines, the amount of the proportion was not specified. C. afterwards purchased of the lessor the reversion of the premises, expectant on the lease to A., & subsequently to acquiring the reversion, purchased A.'s interest in all the premises demised to A. by the lease, & not assigned by him to B. After this purchase by C., one of the gross sums or fines became due, but was not paid, & no proportion of it was demanded by C. from, or was paid by B.:—Held: the double character filled by A. relieved B. from the strict performance of the covenant, & the non-payment by B. of a proportion of the gross sum or fine was not, in the circumstances, a refusal to pay, or such a breach of the covenant, as to deprive B. of his claim to a renewed lease of the property assigned to him.—STATHAM v. LIVERPOOL DOCK CO. (1830), 3 Y. & J. 565; 148 E. R. 1304.

2305. What are costs of renewal—Not costs of action caused by disposition of property of lessor.—Where an owner in fee of property, having granted a lease of it for three lives, & the life of the survivor, & covenanted, for himself, his heirs & assigns, to renew, on the dropping of one or more of the lives mentioned in the lease, by his will so devised the property as, under the limitations of his will, the parties entitled to the estate could not comply with the obligation imposed upon them by testator without instituting a suit:—Held: the costs of such suit must be paid out of testator's personal estate.—WORTHAM v. DACRE (LORD) (1856), 2 K. & J. 437; 27 L. T. O. S. 63; 4 W. R. 451; 69 E. R. 853.

2306. — Costs of reference to determine amount of fine.—By a covenant for renewal in a lease for years the lessor covenanted at any time during the term at the request & "at the costs of the lessee," & on payment by him of a fine calculated upon the number of the expired years of the term & the full improved annual value of the premises at the time of the renewal (the value to be determined by the lessor's surveyor or, at the option of the lessee, by two surveyors to be appointed by the lessor & the lessee respectively, & in case of their differing, by their umpire), to renew the lease for a further term. The lessee having required a renewal, & the parties being unable to agree as to the amount of the fine, the question of the improved annual value of the premises at the time of the renewal was referred to two referees or their umpire, & the umpire made an award:—Held: upon the natural & true construction of the covenant the cost of the reference & award were payable by the lessee as necessary costs of the renewal.—*FITZSIMMONS v. k. Title to accrued fines.—In the case of a renewable lease, the sum calculated as renewal & septennial fines & interest is really compensation for the breach of the covenant to pay a fine on the fall of each life. Therefore, where the lessor's interest in a renewable lease was sold after the lease had been allowed to remain unrenewed until more than one life had dropped, & a large number of fines had accrued due:—Held: (1) the owner of the reversion, though the proper person to receive the fines, receives them only as trustee for the persons who were entitled on the fall of each life; (2) the execution of a fee farm grant subsequent to the publishing of the rental, but before the sale, affords no ground to the purchaser to claim the money paid as renewal & septennial fines & interest.—Re BRINKLEY'S ESTATE (1868), 16 W. 2307. Agreement stipulating for ground rent—Stipulation for building or building lease not imported.]—Deft. was owner of a piece of land which he held subject to certain restrictions as to the buildings which should be erected on it. He received £5 from pltf., for which he signed a receipt, which contained an agreement for a lease of the land for ninety-nine years at a rent of £20, payable quarterly. It also stated that ground rent was to be payable from a certain date, but did not fix any time for the commencement of the term:—Held: pltf. was entitled to a lease for ninety-nine years from the date at which the ground rent was to commence, & the use of the word "ground rent" did not import a stipulation that the ground was to be built on, & therefore did not imply that a building lease was to be agreed on & executed by the parties.—WESLEY v. WALKER (1878), 38 L. T. 284; 26 W. R. 368.

2308. Agreement stipulating for formal contract—Specific performance of agreement refused—No damages for non-performance.]—Where parties have entered into a preliminary building agreement with the intention of executing a more formal & complete contract, the ct. will not decree specific performance of the agreement, nor will it

Upon proof that testator's real estate could be most profitably realised by first putting up the property to auction to be let on a building lease to the highest bidder & then selling the reversion, & that the ground rent to be obtained from the building lease would not be less than the rent of the property in its existing condition, the ct. authorised the trustees to realise in the manner proposed.—*Re JAMES, JAMES v. In pursuance of this agreement pltf. advanced to deft. £1,168 19s. On the completion of six of the houses, deft., at the request of pltf., discontinued the building. After June 24, 1829, pltf. brought indebitatus assumpsit for the £1,168 19s.:—Held: the action was maintainable, the special contract being rescinded by the consent of the parties.—JAMES v. COTTON (1831), 7 Bing. 266; 5 Moo. & P. 26; 9 L. J. O. S. C. P. 55; 131 E. R. 103.

2314. — Refusal by other party to recognise agreement.]—MARSDEN v. SAMBELL, No. 2315, post.

2315. — Effect of rescission—Right to enter & remove goods.]—(1) Where the right of election to rescind a building agreement arises, the person to whom the right of election falls must signify his election to rescind in an unqualified manner:—Held: such election was not made by the appointment of a caretaker to look after the premises, who had no access to part of the premises, & did not exclude the party against whom the election was claimed to have been made from his workings on the other part of the premises.

(2) Such right of election must be exercised within a reasonable time, or, at all events, not after the party against whom it is claimed has been allowed to alter his position on the faith of its continuance.

(3) A refusal by one of the parties to such an agreement to recognise it as subsisting may be a ground for a rescission of the contract by the other party, but there will be no rescission unless that other party claims to rescind.

(4) A party to such an agreement, who himself rescinds it, is not entitled to enter & remove his goods from the premises after the termination of the agreement.—MARSDEN v. SAMBELL (1880), 43 L. T. 120; 28 W. R. 952.

2316. — Partial completion of work—Liability to pay for work done.—Pltf., who was a builder, entered into an arrangement under which he was to erect a building on a piece of land upon the terms that the building should be in accordance with the requirements of the freeholder of the land, who upon its completion should give pltf. a lease of the premises at £90 a year, & pltf. should sublet them at £500 a year. At that time the intended freeholder was one W., & in the course of certain negotiations between the various persons interested in the speculation, but before they had finally come to terms, certain drawings of a portion of the work were shown to pltf. & he was asked to begin the work. He accordingly did so, & had proceeded with the work for some time, incurring considerable expense in executing the same, when it was arranged that in place of W. deft. should become the freeholder, & an alteration in the character of the building was insisted on which pltf. was unwilling to accept on the ground that it would involve a considerably larger expenditure on his part than he had originally contemplated. He therefore discontinued the work, & eventually brought an action against deft. to recover compensation for the amount which he had expended on the same:—Held: the arrangement being one under which pltf. was to erect the building at his own cost on deft.'s land, no promise to pay him for the work executed by him could be implied from the request to him to start the work, nor from the acceptance by deft. of the benefit of the work.—WHEELER v. STRATTON (1911), 105 L. T. 786, D. C.

2317. Covenant to erect buildings—Whether continuing covenant—Implied from covenant to repair erected buildings.—A lease of land contained covenants by the lessees within twelve months to erect certain buildings thereon, & during the term of the lease to keep the premises "so to be erected as aforesaid in good & substantial repair." The lessees failed to erect the buildings within the twelve months; but the lessor accepted a quarter's rent which accrued due next after the expiration of that period. The lessor served upon the lessee a notice under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 14, referring to the building covenant only, & calling upon the lessees to erect the buildings. He then brought an action for recovery of possession:—Held: (1) there had been a waiver of the breach of the building covenant, & the breach was not continuing; (2) the covenant to repair implied an obligation to erect the buildings, & this was continuing; (3) the notice under Conveyancing Act was insufficient because it did not refer to the repairing covenant, as to which alone there was a continuing breach, & consequently the action failed.—JACOB v. DOWN, 2319. Nature of tenancy—Before building completed—Tenancy at will—Not from year to year.—By indenture A. covenanted with B., that in consideration of the expense which B. would be at in erecting on the ground therein described, & agreed to be demised & also in consideration of the yearly rents, covenants, & agreements therein reserved, etc., on the part of B., he (A.) would from time to time, when & so soon as B., his exors., etc., or assigns, should have erected one or more of the messuages therein covenanted to be built, demise & lease unto B., his exors., administrators, nominees, or assigns, the whole, or such part whereon the said messuages should be built, of all the ground, etc., therein described & agreed to be demised for ninety-eight years, yielding & paying the rent or sum of £35 for & during the first year, & so on till the fifth year, when £285 was to be paid, & the same for each remaining year of the term. Proviso, that if the yearly rent or rents, to be reserved by the lease or leases to be granted of any part of the ground agreed to be demised, should amount to the full yearly rent to be reserved, then from time to time the remainder of such ground should be leased, together with the buildings on it, at a yearly peppercorn rent. Covenant by B., for himself, his exors. & administrators, to pay the several yearly rents thereby agreed to be reserved, & all rates, etc., & to complete the buildings therein described, & to accept leases; & that in the meantime, until the granting of such lease or leases, he would perform all the covenants, etc., as if such lease or leases had been granted: with a proviso for re-entry in case of non-payment of the said rents, etc., to be reserved, etc., or on breach of covenant. By indenture, of later date, between B. & C., reciting the above agreement, B. assigned to C. the said recited arts. of agreement, & all the right title, etc., which B. had, etc., by virtue of the said indenture, subject to the performance by C., etc., of the covenants therein: & B. appointed C. to be his attorney to demand the said leases, etc.; & C. covenanted to perform the covenants of the said arts. of agreement, & to indemnify B., as assignee of the said articles. C. erected buildings on a part of the ground, & obtained leases of them from A., & paid A. the stipulated sums, in respect of the portion of the ground of which leases had not been granted, up to the quarter day previous to May 23, 1857, when he assigned to another person:—Held: (1) the first mentioned arts. of agreement did not amount to a demise to B. of the land; (2) B. was not a tenant from year to

2320. ——— Licence coupled with interest.]—

By a building agreement between the Ecclesiastical Comrs. & deft. the right was given to him to enter upon a piece of land belonging to them for the purpose of erecting a number of houses upon it. As each house should be erected & completed to the satisfaction of the Comrs. they agreed to grant a lease of it to deft. for ninety-nine years. The lease was to be in a specified form, one of the clauses in which provided that the Comrs. should have power to erect on the land adjoining the demised land any buildings whatsoever, whether they should or should not affect or diminish the light enjoyed by the lessee. It was also provided by the agreement that nothing therein contained should be deemed to operate as an actual demise of the land to deft., or to create as between him & the Comrs. the relation of tenant & landlord.

On one of the plots deft. erected a house, No. 28, & the Comrs. granted to him a lease of that house in the specified form. Deft. sold that house to plffs., & transferred the lease of it to them. He afterwards erected on an adjoining plot a house, No. 30, which when completed obstructed the access of light to some of the windows of plffs.' house. They brought an action against deft. claiming an injunction & damages:—Held: at the time when deft. transferred the lease of No. 28 to plffs., he had not under the building agreement such an interest in the adjoining plot, No. 30, as would enable him to make an express grant of an easement of light over it, & consequently no such grant by him could be implied.

Deft. had at the most a kind of licence, coupled with an interest in the land, which could not ripen into ownership until he had actually completed the building upon the land (COLLINS, M.R.).—QUICKE v. 2321. ——— After building completed—Subject to terms of lease.]—Agreement to grant a lease to S. when S. should have erected certain buildings on the premises to be demised. No covenant to pay rent before the execution of the lease. S. after the buildings are erected, holds the premises, subject to the terms in the lease, but is liable in assumpsit for use & occupation.—BANISTER v. USBORNE (1796), Peake, Add. Cas. 70, N. P.

2322. ——— ———.]—(1) By a building agreement it was stipulated that as soon as R. should have roofed-in the houses to be erected by him on certain plots of ground belonging to H., H. would grant & R. would accept a separate lease for ninety-nine years, at the rent therein mentioned, of each house when & so soon as the roof was completed, & the plot of ground on which it stood; the leases to be in the form of a draft annexed to the agreement. There was a proviso that the lessor "in respect of any of the plots not previously demised," might re-enter, in the event of the rent being in arrear for twenty-one days, or if at any time the works were not regularly proceeded with for twenty-one days. The form of lease contained a covenant to complete the house within a certain period, & a proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent, or breach of covenant, but no power of re-entry was given if the works were not proceeded with for twenty-one days. In June, 1887, R. assigned to L. the benefit of the agreement as to four houses which he had roofed-in. R. died in July, 1887, & after his death building operations stopped for more than twenty-one days. In Oct. 1887, L. brought his action to compel H. to grant leases. H., by his defence, denied the right of L. to leases, on the grounds that the works had been stopped for more than twenty-one days, & that rent was in arrear:—Held: as soon as R. had roofed-in a house he was entitled to claim & bound to accept a lease of it, & his rights & liabilities were the same as if the lease had been granted, & he no longer held the house on the terms of the building agreement, but on the terms of the draft lease, & as the draft contained no power of re-entry on work being discontinued for twenty-one days, discontinuance, which did not take place till after the right to a lease had accrued, did not affect that right.

(2) The only evidence on the question whether the rents were in arrear was a statement of account which upon R.'s death H. sent to his administratrix, & the items in which were admitted to be correct. H. had lent considerable sums to R., who also had become indebted to him to a considerable amount for rent. R. had paid on account sums amounting to many times more than the amount of rents, but H. appropriated most of them to the loan account, so as to show R. largely indebted on the rent account:—Held: it lay upon H. to show that R. had not appropriated a sufficient part of his remittances to payment of rent, & as H. had not shown this, he had not made out that rent was in arrear, & therefore L. was entitled to have the leases granted.—LOWTHER v. HEAVER (1889), 41 Ch. D. 248; 58 L. J. Ch. 482; 60 L. T. 310; 37 W. R. 465, C. A.

2323. Performance of agreement—What amounts to—Substantial performance.]—(1) A condition, on the sale of leasehold property, that the title of the lessor would not be shown, & should not be inquired into, held to be binding, & the purchaser compelled to perform his contract, although in the investigation before the master a serious defect in the lessor's title was discovered.

(2) A lessee of land covenanted to build thereon two houses, with the approbation & under the inspection of the lessor's surveyor, & to expend in such building £400. With the surveyor's approbation he built five houses on the land, no two of which were worth so much as £400, though all together were worth much more:—Held: the covenant was substantially performed, & there was no objection, on the ground of the deviation from its terms, under the circumstances, to the lessor's title.—HUME v. BENTLEY (1852), 5 De G. & Sm. 520; 21 L. J. Ch. 760; 16 Jur. 1109; 64 E. R. 1225.

2324. — Compliance with statutory building regulations.—Necessity for.—Where a man, under contract to build according to a specified plan, & according to the Metropolitan Building Acts, commenced building according to the plan, which was in some particulars in contravention of the Building Acts, & upon being cautioned by the board, stopped building, & refused to proceed:—Held: he was bound to rebuild in conformity with the plan, modified so as to meet the requirements of the statutes.—*CUBITT v. 2325. — Approval by lessor of proposed buildings.—Failure to approve.—The Metropolitan Board of Works, the owners in fee of two adjoining pieces of land, agreed with X. to grant him a lease of one plot on his erecting on the land a building according to certain plans to be approved by the board. The board entered into a similar agreement with W. as to the other plot, X. then agreed with W. for a sub-lease of the first plot on similar terms. W. subsequently entered into two agreements with a co. (formed for the purpose of erecting an hotel) by each of which he contracted to grant them a sub-lease of one of the two plots on the completion of a building according to the terms of the agreement. Each agreement provided that the co. "shall before Oct. 30, 1884, cover the ground . . . with a substantial building or part of a substantial building of such class, size, form, elevation, etc., & general character as shall be approved by the board or their superintending architect on their behalf, before the erection of such building is commenced." Another clause provided that the co. should forthwith submit for the approval of the board plans of the building to be built by the co., & submit to any modifications required by the board. Another clause provided that "no building shall be commenced before the said plans, etc., shall have been approved by the board as aforesaid." The plans were duly submitted to the board, which was satisfied with them, but declined to grant separate leases of the two plots if one entire building was erected over both, & required that the title to both leases should be vested in one & the same person. W. endeavoured to arrange this, but failed. The co. having gone into liquidation, the building not being completed, W. claimed to be admitted as a creditor of the co. in respect of damages for the alleged breach of the agreement:—Held: there was no condition precedent, but an agreement to erect such particular kind of building as the board should have approved, & the board not having approved of any particular kind of building, there was nothing capable of performance, & therefore, the co. had committed no breach of the agreement.—Re NORTHUMBER-

2326. — Right of builder to use surface for mining operations.—Under collateral lease.—Liability under building agreement prevails.—The lessee of a plot of land for a term of ninety-nine years, commencing in 1894, covenanted within three years from the commencement of the term to erect seven dwelling-houses on the demised premises, similar to dwelling-houses already erected in a certain street. The lease contained an exception of the minerals (which did not belong to the lessor) & reserved to the owner for the time being full rights of working, including power to destroy the surface. At the date of this lease the lessee had acquired from the owner a lease of the minerals with full surface rights. The houses in the street in question were not exactly alike, some having four rooms & others five. In an action for specific performance of the covenant:—Held: (1) upon the construction of the lease, the covenant was not extinguished by the power reserved by the lease to the mineral owner to destroy the surface; (2) a decree for specific performance was the only remedy available as the damages for the injury done to the reversion would necessarily be infinitesimal, on account of the length of the lease, & would therefore be no adequate compensation for the depreciation of the reversion; (3) the houses to be erected were sufficiently defined to enable the ct. to order specific performance; & specific performance was ordered accordingly.—MOLYNEUX v. RICHARD, [1906] 1 Ch. 34; 75 L. J. Ch. 39; 93 L. T. 698; 54 W. R. 177; 22 T. L. R. 76.

2327. — Waiver of performance.—On granting a building lease for 92½ years the lessee covenanted that he would, within the first five years of the term, build thirty-four additional houses, of the dimensions therein mentioned, & keep the same in repair, & the same so repaired, at the end or other sooner determination of the term, deliver up to the lessor or his assigns. Some only of the thirty-four houses were built; but the lessor, notwithstanding received the rent, payable under the lease, for forty-six years afterwards:—Held: on a sale of the property, by public auction, by the assignees in bkpy. of the lessee, although there had been a waiver by the lessor of the covenant to build, still the covenant to deliver up the houses, at the end or sooner determination of the term, continued in force, & was a valid objection to the title; & the purchaser could not be required to accept compensation or indemnity. The circumstance that the purchaser could at any time rid himself of all liability, in respect of the breach of the covenant, by assigning the premises to a pauper, was considered no reason for compelling the purchaser to accept the title.—NOUAILLE v. FLIGHT (1844), 7 Beav. 521; 13 L. J. Ch. 414; 8 Jur. 838; 49 E. R. 1168.

2331. Assignment of agreement—Default of purchaser—Time essence of contract.]—If it be of the essence of the contract that an act should be completed by a fixed date, an extension of the time does not operate as an absolute waiver of that condition, but only substitutes the extended time for the original time.

M. & W., entitled to a lease under a building agreement, defeasible by notice in case they did not complete buildings by Jan. 1, 1874, in July, 1873, entered into an agreement to sell their interest to plffs. for £2,000, £200 of which was paid on signing the agreement, £800 & £1,000 to be paid at the times specified in clause 5, which was as follows: "If the purchaser shall fail to pay either the £800 on July 14, 1873, or the £1,000 on July 31, 1873, or as to the £1,000 upon such deferred date as the parties may agree upon, all money paid previous to such default being made shall be absolutely forfeited & this contract become null & void." The £800 was duly paid. The time for payment of the £1,000 was extended to Aug. 26, 1873. The purchaser made default in payment at the date. The vendors gave notice to determine the agreement, & a suit for specific performance was instituted by the purchasers:—Held: by clause 5, time was made of the essence of the contract. The extension of the time to August 26, did not operate as an absolute waiver of that condition, but merely substituted Aug. 26 for the original date.—BARCLAY v. MESSENGER (1874), 43 L. J. Ch. 449; 30 L. T. 351; 22 W. R. 522.

2332. Rent—Liability for—No entry or possession by builder.]—By arts. of agreement not under seal plff. agreed to grant to deft. a lease at a certain rent for ninety-nine years of a piece of land so soon as the latter should have erected upon it a messuage, & deft. undertook until the execution of the lease, to "hold the said piece of land & other the premises at the rent & subject to the conditions to be contained" in the lease. Deft. never entered upon or took possession of the piece of land:—Held: although the arts. of agreement did not operate as a demise, yet deft. by a collateral contract to the intended lease had undertaken to pay the amount of the rent, & it was immaterial that he had never entered upon possession of the land.—ADAMS v. HAGGER (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 480; 41 L. T. 224; 43 J. P. 796; 27 W. R. 402, C. A.

2333. —Acceptance by lessor before building completed—Whether waiver of breach of covenant.]

—A tenant was in possession of plots of land under an agreement for leases to be granted when he should have fulfilled certain conditions as to building. The intention of the parties was, in the view of the ct., that the agreement should be regarded as a lease. The conditions were (to the landlord's knowledge) not fulfilled within the appointed time, but after that date the landlord demanded rent as under the leases & the tenant paid it:—Held: the landlord could not, on receiving the rent, stipulate that it was received "without prejudice to any breaches of covenant made up to that time in the agreement for leases."—STRONG v. STRINGER (1889), 61 L. T. 470; 5 T. L. R. 638.

2335. Right to quiet possession.]—In 1790 defts.' predecessors in title entered into an agreement with a builder, under which the builder was to erect certain houses upon land belonging to them, & they agreed to grant him leases of the houses when erected at the yearly rent of £25 for each acre of land for the term of ninety-nine years from 1790. The builder was accordingly let into possession of the land, & built houses thereon in pursuance of the agreement. The full amount of the stipulated rent of £25 per acre having been secured by leases of houses erected on part of the land, the builder became entitled under the agreement to have leases granted to him of the houses erected on the rest of the land for the said term of ninety-nine years at a peppercorn rent, but no leases of the latter houses were ever asked for or granted, nor was any rent paid in respect of them. The interest of the builder in two of these latter houses became vested in plff., who continued in possession of them until the expiration of the term of ninety-nine years, when defts. entered into possession. In an action to recover possession of the two houses, plff. contended that his predecessor in title became tenant at will, & that by Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 7, combined with ss. 2 & 15, the title of defts. was barred after the lapse of five years from the passing of the Act:—Held: as a ct. of equity would have restrained defts.' predecessors in title from re-entering during the ninety-nine years covered by the agreement, they had no right of re-entry during that period, & therefore the statute did not operate so as to bar their title.—WARREN v. MURRAY, [1894] 2 Q. B. 648; 64 L. J. Q. B. 42; 71 L. T. 458; 43 W. R. 3; 10 T. L. R. 573; 9 R. 793, C. A.

B. Rights in Relation to Soil.

2337. Pending completion of building—Right to excavate & dispose of material—Reservation of minerals.—The holder of a building lease where minerals are reserved has a right to dig foundations for buildings about to be erected, & dispose of the materials dug out, but not to do so in order to improve the surface as a building site.—ROBINSON v. MILNE (1884), 53 L. J. Ch. 1070.

The implied permission to remove & dispose ought then to extend to what the parties might fairly be deemed to have contemplated would be found in making the excavations; but beyond this point it ought not to be carried. The existence of the boat was unknown, & its discovery was not contemplated. In my opinion, then, the licence to remove & dispose extended to the clay & ordinary soil likely to be found in pursuing the licence to excavate, but it did not extend to what was unknown & not contemplated, & therefore did not comprise the boat (CHITTY, J.).—*ELWES v. After completion of building—Soil between houses—Vests in builder—Interference with reserved right of way.—The proprietor of land agreed to grant leases to deft. of certain houses he had undertaken to build on the land, deft. to hold the land & premises for eighty years, yielding therefore £400 a year rent, & to build a wall all along the west side of the land; the landlord to have a right of way over the streets between the houses. Deft. entered, paid rent, built houses, & obtained leases of the houses as fast as they were built:—Held: he was under these circumstances, in possession of the soil between the houses, & the landlord could not maintain trespass against him for erecting a wall, on the west side of the land, across the end of one of the streets.—ALEXANDER v. BONNIN (1888), 4 Bing. N. C. 799; 1 Arn. 337; 6 Scott, 611; 8 L. J. C. P. 53; 132 E. R. 997.

2342. ——J.—In Jan. 1857, deft. agreed with D., that as soon as he had erected thirty-seven houses, in eight blocks, on certain land, he would grant him eight leases of the land & houses. The leases were to contain covenants to insure against fire in the Law Fire Insurance Office, in the joint names of deft. & D. or his assigns; & if D. failed to erect the houses within the time specified, deft. was to have the power of re-entry. In Apr. 1858, the number of the houses, was, by agreement between the parties, altered, & as to seventeen of them, D. was to roof them in by June 24, & complete them by Sept. 29 following; & deft. agreed to grant to D., or his nominee, a lease for four carcasses of houses then standing on block No. 1; & also, as soon as D. or his assigns should have erected & roofed in any of the carcasses of the houses in any of the blocks to grant a lease of the said block to D. or his nominee, in the same manner as if the houses were finished. At that time there were, in addition to the four carcasses on block No. 1, three standing on block No. 4, & D. gave the name of pltf. as his nominee. Deft. agreed, as soon as D. would be entitled to require the same, to grant leases of the seven houses to pltf., & D. assigned to pltf. the two plots of land, Nos. 1 & 4, & all the benefit of the agreement of Jan. 1857, & Apr. 1858, in relation thereto. The seven houses on the two blocks were duly completed within the time specified, but none of the remaining houses were erected. On Sept. 23, 1858, pltf. insured the premises in the Phoenix Office, & in his own name only. Deft. discovered the latter circumstance, as pltf. alleged, two days afterwards, but as deft. himself alleged, not till Dec. 1. Deft.'s solr., in Jan. 1859, wrote to pltf.'s solr., claiming a forfeiture; & on Feb. 2 following the seven houses were insured in the Law Fire Office, in the names of pltf. & deft. On Mar. 10, deft. commenced an action of ejectment for the forfeiture, & he asserted his right to re-enter upon any part of the property for breach of the covenant to build the thirty-seven houses, & of the covenant to insure. Pltf. thereupon filed a bill for an injunction, & for specific performance of the agreement to grant a lease:—Held: as between pltf. & deft., the agreement related only to seven houses, & pltf. was bound by the stipulations of D. only so far as they related to the said seven houses; & a decree was made in the terms of the prayer.—*ROGEIS v. lease of plot G. should be granted as soon as five of the ten houses on that plot were covered in. W. mortgaged this contract to pltf., & afterwards became insolvent. Pltf. covered in the requisite number of houses on plots B. & G., & applied for leases of them, denying at the same time his liability to take upon himself the other parts of the agreement, upon the performance of which the granting of leases of plots B. & G. did not by the terms of the contract depend:—Held: as by the terms of the contract the right to have leases of plots G. & B. depended only on conditions which had been fulfilled, pltf., as assignee of W., was entitled to have leases of those plots granted to him, without assuming W.'s obligations under the entire contract.—*WILKINSON v. SUB-SECT. 3.—THE LESSOR.

A. In General.

2345. Covenant to make roads—Sufficiency of performance.—A lease, reciting that defts. had appropriated & laid out certain meadows as building ground, demised a portion of them to pltf., who covenanted to build two houses thereon; & defts. covenanted "that on such buildings being covered in they would cut good & sufficient roads & footpaths in, through, & over the said fields & meadows, & cut & construct a good & sufficient sewer along & under the said turnpike road & under the said intended roads in the said fields for the common use of pltf. & all other lessees or tenants of other portions of the said fields or meadows":—Held: this covenant, as far as concerned the roads, was not performed by defts. making a road up to pltf.'s houses; but they ought, as soon as pltf.'s houses had been covered in, to have made the roads in, through, & over the whole meadows as contemplated by the building scheme, although no other houses than pltf.'s had been built.—MASON v. COLE (1849), 4 Exch. 375; 18 L. J. Ex. 478; 154 E. R. 1257.

2346. Compensation to builder by purchaser—For interference with performance of agreement—Statutory declaration by lessor—Liability to reimburse purchaser.—A land co. were in possession of part of certain settled estates under building agreements providing for leases to be eventually granted, such agreements to expire in case the buildings were not completed in 1881 & 1885 respectively. A railway co. projected a scheme which would involve taking part of the premises & interfere with the building operations. The tenant for life, the leasing authority of the estate, under these circumstances, without making any agreement to that effect, did in fact, through his agent's conduct, waive the obligation of the land co. to complete within the specified time. In 1883 the railway co., with knowledge of these circumstances, agreed to purchase the fee subject to the building agreements. In 1886 the railway co. entered without making a deposit or giving a bond to the land co. under the Lands Clauses Act, though knowing that the land co. claimed that their agreements were subsisting in equity. The land co. brought an action against the railway co., & established that the railway co. had wrongfully entered, the land co. being equitably entitled to an extension of time. The railway co. took their conveyance of the fee, the tenant for life, who joined as beneficial owner, & his land agent, making statutory declarations that they knew of no negotiation of any kind with the land co. having reference to any extension of time under the building agreements. The conveyance was expressed to be subject, so far as the premises were affected thereby, to the building agreements. The land co. consequently obtained compensation from the railway co. in respect of their interest in the lands taken:—Held: in the absence of fraud, neither under the statutory declarations nor under the covenant for title supplied by Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), were the railway co. entitled to be recouped the compensation they had paid the land co.—*LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. 2347. Waiver of forfeiture—Builder permitted to employ workmen—After date of forfeiture.—Land was demised to defts., who covenanted in the lease to build & complete certain houses thereon, within a year; & that, if they did not, the lease should be void. The houses not being completed within the specified period:—Held: the forfeiture was not waived by the steward of the lessor having permitted deft. to employ workmen in completing the houses, for a short period after such forfeiture.—DOE d. KENSINGTON v. BRINDLEY (1826), 12 Moore, C. P. 37; 5 L. J. O. S. C. P. 3.

2349. — Acceptance of rent.—JACOB v. DOWN, No. 2317, ante.

2350. — Includes waiver of subsidiary rights—Repair of erected buildings.—(1) Where there is an express covenant to build, both as to time & mode of building, no further covenant to build can be implied from a covenant to repair.

(2) Waiver of forfeiture for not building in accordance with such a covenant carries with it a waiver of forfeiture for breach of a covenant to repair the said building if & when erected.—STEPHENS v. JUNIOR ARMY & NAVY STORES, LTD., [1914] 2 Ch. 516; 84 L. J. Ch. 56; 111 L. T. 1055; 30 T. L. R. 697; 58 Sol. Jo. 808, C. A.

2351. Relief against forfeiture—Full performance of agreement by lessor.—A builder agreed to take some land on a building lease, & to erect houses within a specified period, the landowner making him certain advances. There was a clause of forfeiture, in default of their being completed within the time. Relief against a forfeiture was refused to the builder, it appearing that the landowner had fully performed his part of the contract.—CROFT v. GOLDSMID (1857), 24 Beav. 312; 53 E. R. 378.

2352. Right of re-entry—Whether passing with assignment of lessor's interest—No expressed intention—No sufficient words.—By indenture of Mar. 31, 1852, H. demised to B. for ninety-nine years a piece of land & four unfinished dwelling-houses; & B. covenanted that he would, on or before June 25, 1852, finish the dwelling-houses under the direction & to the satisfaction of the surveyor of H.: Provided that, if default should be made, it should be lawful for H. "into the demised premises, or any part thereof in the name of the whole, & repossess, retain, & enjoy the same as of his former estate." By a subsequent indenture of the same date, B. mortgaged the premises in question to pltf. By indenture of July 30, 1852, between H. of the one part, & deft. of the other part, reciting that H. had entered into several underleases affecting the said premises, the particulars of which were known to deft., H. assigned to deft. the said leasehold premises, "& all the estate, right, title, & interest of him the said H. in, to, or out of the said premises," for the residue of the term of years granted by the aforesaid indenture of lease, subject nevertheless to the underleases therein referred to. B. did not complete the houses on June 25, 1852. & no surveyor was appointed. In July, 1852, B. gave up possession of the premises to deft. Pltf. having brought ejectment as mtgee.:—Held: assuming there was a sufficient clause of re-entry, & also a forfeiture of which H. might have availed himself, the indenture of assignment did not show any intention or use sufficient words, to pass a right of entry to deft., even if such a right is assignable under Real Property Act, 1845 (c. 106), s. 5, which, semble, it is not.—HUNT v. REMNANT (1854), 9 Exch. 635; 23 L. J. Ex. 135; 22 L. T. O. S. 350; 18 Jur. 335; 2 W. R. 276; 156 E. R. 271.

2255. Agreement for vesting plant & material in lessors.—By a building contract it was agreed that all materials brought on the land by the intended lessee should become the property of the intended lessors. The intended lessee entered & commenced building, but obtained no lease:—Held: the materials brought on the land by him vested in the intended lessors, & were not liable to be taken in execution by a creditor of the intended lessee.—*BLAKE v. 2256. Rights as against execution creditor of builder.—BLAKE v. IZARD, No. 2355, ante.

2257. Rights as against builder's trustee in bankruptcy.—A builder agreed to build in a given time on a piece of land a certain number of houses which were to be leased to him as they were covered in. Under the agreement, on default in the building stipulation, or on the builder's bkpcy., the other party had a right to re-enter & take possession of all materials on the land not demised.

Before the time had expired the builder went into liquidation, & the trustee took the materials on the land & disclaimed the contract. The other party to the agreement claimed the materials:—Held: the claim rested on the bkpcy., & the stipulation as to the right arising on bkpcy. was void as against the trustee.—*Re HARRISON, Ex p. 2258. Damages in addition to materials forfeited.

—By a building agreement dated June 10, 1896, deft. agreed with pltf. to pull down & re-erect H.'s Hotel, D. street, in carcase before Dec. 25, 1896, & thereupon to take a lease of it from pltf. for eighty years from June 24, 1896, at a pepper-corn rent for the first year, & at a rent of £1,100 for the second & every subsequent year of the term. Deft. undertook to finish his part of the agreement by Dec. 25, 1896. By clause 2 of the agreement "on default by the lessee of the stipulation contained in this clause" (i.e. to complete within the time allowed) he shall forfeit all benefit under this agreement which shall thereupon cease & be determined, & all the materials & buildings on the said premises shall be forfeited to & become the absolute property of the lessor." By clause 11: "If the new buildings shall not be erected or completed within the time & in the manner aforesaid before Dec. 25, 1896, or if the lessee shall fail to observe or perform any of the stipulations herein & in the said form of lease contained or on his part to be observed & performed, or if he shall not proceed with the works with proper diligence, then & in any of the said cases the lessor shall be entitled to re-enter upon & to take immediate possession of the said piece of land & premises with all buildings, erections, plant, & materials thereon without making to the lessee any allowance or compensation in respect thereof, & without any process at law or any notice to the lessee or any other person or persons to quit the said premises or to determine the holding thereof." Deft. went into possession on June 10, 1896, but beyond pulling down about £200 worth of materials did nothing, & on Jan. 19, 1897, pltf. re-entered. Deft. contended that the effect of these two clauses was to limit pltf. to such compensation as he could get by re-entry & taking possession of the materials on the premises, & that he could recover no damages. Pltf. on re-entry could only relet from June, 1899, at £900 a year rent:—Held: in addition to the re-entry, pltf. could recover as damages the loss of two years' rent at £1,100, & the loss of £200 a year at twenty-five years' purchase, viz. £5,000, in all £7,200.—MARSHALL v. MACKINTOSH (1898), 78 L. T. 750; 46 W. R. 580; 14 T. L. R. 458; 42 Sol. Jo. 553.

SECT. 3.—CHATELS.

2359. Whether "lease" applicable to chattels.]

—Whether one can speak technically & strictly of a lease of chattels or not, I do not think that in this statute [Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39)], a lease of chattels is contemplated, & that rent reserved by a lease or tack of chattels can be said to embrace such an annual payment as is agreed to be paid for the hire of these chattels in this case (COLLINS, J.).—JONES v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SWEETMEAT AUTOMATIC DELIVERY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1895] 1 Q. B. 484; 64 L. J. Q. B. 84; 71 L. T. 763; 43 W. R. 318; 11 T. L. R. 78; 39 Sol. Jo. 97; 15 R. 136, D. C.

Comrs., [1916] 1 K. B. 306.

2360. Lease without possession given.—No rent paid.—Whether fraudulent.]—A conveyance of chattels unaccompanied with possession is void. Although in the same instrument be contained a valid mtge. of leasehold buildings in which the chattels are situated. Where a person pretending to be a purchaser of goods under an execution leased the goods at a rent to the former owner who still continued in possession, no money having been proved to be given for the purchase nor rent paid under the lease, it was a question for the jury whether the lease was not fraudulent. But under circumstances the possession of the lessee might have been the possession of the lessor.—REED v. BLADES (1813), 5 Taunt. 212; 128 E. R. 669.

Annotation.—Refd. Reeves v. Capper (1838), 5 Bing. N. C. 136.

2361. Subject-matter of lease.—Rolling stock.—

Whether lease ultra vires.]—The railway of the T. Co. was a short line in connection with the lines of the G. E. Co. & the B. Co., & all traffic which went over it passed over some of the railways of those cos. By a local & personal Act in 1863, reciting a lease of the T. Ry. to certain lessees for a term to expire in 1875, & reciting that under an arrangement between the G. E. Co. & the lessees the traffic was worked by the G. E. Co., powers were given to the three cos. & the lessees to enter into arrangements for the modification of the lease, for the transfer of it to the G. E. Co. & B. Co., or one of them, & for the granting of a new lease to one or both of those two cos.; & it then provided that the G. E. Co. & the B. Co. might enter into agreements with respect to the working, maintenance, & management of the T. Ry., or any part thereof, & of the railways of the two last-mentioned cos. connected therewith. The G. E. Co. afterwards became lessees of the B. Ry. for a long term. The lease of the T. Ry. having expired, the G. E. Co. in 1876 entered into an agreement with the T. Co. to supply the T. Co. with locomotive power for five years upon the terms therein mentioned, & with carriages, waggons, & break vans for two years. An action was commenced by the A.-G., at the relation a manufacture of rolling stock, to restrain the G. E. Co. from letting rolling stock on hire, & from manufacturing any rolling stock for the purpose of so letting it:—Held: apart from the local & personal Act, the letting on hire by the G. E. Co. to the T. Co., whose line was connected with their own & could only be worked profitably in connection with it, parts of their surplus stock was not ultra vires; if it would otherwise have been so, it was authorised by the local & personal Act.—A.-G. v. GREAT EASTERN RY. CO. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 449; 48 L. J. Ch. 428; 40 L. T. 265; 27 W. R. 759, C. A.; affd. (1880), 5 App. Cas. 473, H. L.

2362. ———.]—Defts. agreed to hire forty-four waggons from pltf's, paying in respect of twenty specified waggons an annual rent of £285, for five years, & in respect of the other twenty-four an annual rent of £249 for three years. It was agreed that the said waggons should, at the expiration of the respective terms of the demise, & after payment of the rents reserved during the said terms respectively, become the absolute property of the lessees without any further payment whatsoever.

Defts., having paid the first two years' rent in respect of the twenty-four waggons, sent to pltf's. the whole of the remaining one year's rent, with a letter stating that this sum was paid in discharge of all rent or other payment due in respect of the twenty-four waggons. The rent in respect of the other twenty waggons was then in arrear, & pltf's' agent declined to receive the payment upon the terms of the letter, requesting the clerk who brought it to take it back. The clerk refused to do so, & left the house without taking up the money or the letter. Pltf's' agent thereupon retained the money, & entered it in pltf's' ledger as a payment upon the general account:—Held: the contracts in respect of the twenty-four waggons & the twenty were separable & distinct; & the condition as to the expiration of the term on which the twenty-four waggons were to become the property of defts. was fulfilled when all the rents accruing due under it had been paid.—LANCASHIRE WAGGON CO., LTD. v. NUTTALL (1879), 42 L. T. 465; 44 J. P. 536, C. A.

2363. ———.]—An agreement for the hire of railway waggons at a fixed yearly rent for a fixed period, with an option of purchase at a nominal price at the end of the period, is not by reason of a stipulation that the lenders may distrain as ordinary landlords for arrears of rent upon the personal chattels of the hirer, in the event of the bkpcy. of the hirer, inoperative as against his general creditors.—LEMAN v. 2366. Definition of flats—Separate houses one above another.—Formerly houses were built so that each house occupied a separate site, but in modern times a practice has grown up of putting separate houses one above the other. They are built in separate flats or storeys, but for all legal & ordinary purposes they are separate houses. Each is separately let & separately occupied, & has no connection with those above or below, except in so far as it may derive support from those below instead of from the ground, as in the case of ordinary houses (JESSEL, M.R.).—YORKSHIRE INSURANCE CO. v. 2368. Improper user by other tenants of their flats—No physical interference.—A covenant in a lease for quiet enjoyment, without interruption by the landlord or any person claiming under him, relates only to freedom from disturbance by adverse claimants, extending to some physical interference with the use of the property demised as distinguished from its mere comfortable enjoyment. The lessee cannot sue in such a covenant in respect merely of noise or disagreeable sights or sounds. 2370. Agreement to provide service—Whether enforceable by specific performance—Damages in lieu.—By indenture of lease defts. let to plff. for the term of twenty-one years a residential flat in a block of buildings at W. The lease contained a clause, by which it was agreed & declared that the premises were taken by the lessee subject to the regulations made by the lessors with respect to the duties of the resident porter, the regulations being set forth in the schedule thereunder written & to be considered as forming part of the indenture. By the regulations the rooms in the building were to be, with the entrance & staircase, in charge of a resident porter appointed by the lessors who was to act as servant to the tenants of the rooms in the block. The tenants were to have the right to the general services of the porter as thereafter defined & to special services under certain conditions. The general services of the porter were to be in constant attendance in the building either by himself or in his temporary absence by some trustworthy assistant, to cleanse the stairs & passages every morning, & to receive for, & deliver to, the tenants all letters, parcels & messages. The lessors appointed a porter who was away for four hours every day acting as cook in a neighbouring building, & during his absence his duties were attended to by a charwoman or some boys:—Held: a decree for specific performance could not be granted & for two reasons: first, that part of the agreement which provided for the appointment by the lessors of a porter, was not divisible from so much of it as provided for the various duties of the porter, & as such a contract would require the constant supervision of the pt. during the existence of the lease, it was not one for which a decree of specific performance could be granted: secondly, damages were a sufficient compensation for the breach.—RYAN v. MUTUAL TONTINE WESTMINSTER CHAMBERS ASSOCN., [1893] 1 Ch. 116; 62 L. J. Ch. 252; 67 L. T. 820; 41 W. R. 146; 9 T. L. R. 72; 37 Sol. Jo. 45; 2 R. 156, C. A.

By a similar agreement other rooms were let by G.'s trustees to W. A third letting by G.'s trustees of another set of rooms was to S., in which case the additional rent was for "cleaning the premises by the housekeeper," the words "appointed by the landlords" being omitted. G.'s trustees sold & conveyed the building to deft. co., subject to the tenancies. & the co., by a similar agreement let another set of rooms to K. & Co., & the co. thereby agreed "to appoint & pay a housekeeper to be in attendance between the hours of 8 a.m. & 10 p.m. of each weekday, who shall act as the servant of the lessees in cleaning the rooms, windows & skylights excepted, being appointed for that purpose in charge thereof by the lessees. Such appointment shall not constitute any responsibility on the lessors' part for the act or deficiency of such housekeeper, or of any one in his or her employment, or anything arising therefrom, but the lessors will remove such housekeeper & substitute another if called upon to do so by at least two-thirds of the tenants," who negatively agreed not to require the premises to be open before 8 a.m. or after 10 p.m. or to require access on Sundays. The co. let other rooms to O. & Co. by two agreements containing similar terms except that their second agreement did not include any agreement that the housekeeper should attend between 8 a.m. & 10 p.m. After all the tenancies had continued for some time the resident housekeeper, without any notice to the tenants, left the building which was placed in charge of a housekeeper who resided on the top floor of another building, about sixty yards away from door to door, & had charge also of the building in which he resided & a third building. This housekeeper attended at the tenants' house at irregular & short times between 7 a.m. & 8.30 p.m. & had a final look round later on, & if in his absence the tenants wished to see him they had to seek him in one or both of the other buildings in his charge:—Held: (1) if it was necessary to decide the question, there seemed to be a correlative obligation, implied on the part of the landlords, as to supplying the services of a housekeeper corresponding with the tenants' obligation to pay the additional rents for those services; (2) the landlords' obligation as to the housekeeper was one "with reference to the subject-matter of the lease" within Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 11 (which had not altered the law), & would therefore bind the reversionary interest, at any rate if the agreements were under seal; but it was unnecessary to decide whether the want of a seal prevented the result, inasmuch 2375. — — — — —.]—Where a person uses his land for any purpose for which it may in the ordinary course of the enjoyment of land be used, & without any default or negligence on his part damage happens to his neighbour's premises, no liability attaches to him. Further, if a person claiming to be compensated for damage caused by dangerous matter upon his neighbour's land has consented to such dangerous matter being brought upon his neighbour's land, he cannot recover. Therefore, where a landlord of premises lets a part of them, & at the time the tenant takes such part a water supply has been laid on to the premises by the landlord, the landlord is not, in the absence of contractual obligation, liable to the tenant for injury to goods of the latter, upon that portion of the premises occupied by him, caused by an overflow of water by reason of defective work to the landlord's water supply by a contractor employed by him, provided that the contractor is competent to do the work & was employed by the landlord upon receipt of notice of the defect in the water supply.—*BLAKE v. Turning on the tap, & finding no water, he went away without turning the tap off. When the water was turned on next morning it overflowed, went through the floor, & damaged pltf.'s goods in the room below. The jury found that the damage was caused by the negligence of the clerk in leaving the tap open:—Held: defts. were liable for the damage so caused by the negligence of their clerk, upon the ground that, whether the use of the lavatory by the clerk was or was not within the scope of his authority, it was at all events an incident to his employment, so as to render his employer liable for the damage resulting from his negligence in such use.—*RUDDIMAN & Co. v. For their own purposes, defts. decided to pull down a great part of the building above pltf.'s shop, & they employed a contractor to execute the work. In consequence of the work, damage was done to pltf.'s business & goods, & in respect of this he sued defts. The county ct. judge held that defts. were liable inasmuch as they had not taken all the precautions they might have taken to prevent the mischief:—Held: (1) although defts. had employed an independent contractor to execute the work, from which in the natural course of things injurious consequences might be expected to arise, there was still a duty upon defts. to prevent the execution of that work from becoming wrongful; (2) there was evidence upon which the county ct. judge could find that defts. had not taken the precautions they might have taken to prevent mischief arising to pltf.—*ODELL v. 2380. Repair—Obligation on landlord to keep in repair—Extent of obligation—To tenants & strangers.—Deft., who was the owner of certain premises in the City of London, let the different floors as offices to separate tenants. The only mode of access to the offices was by means of a staircase, which was not let to the tenants, but which remained in the occupation & control of deft. The leases to the tenants contained no covenant by deft. to keep the staircase in repair. Pltf. went to the office occupied by one of the tenants on business, & when coming down the stairs, fell & was injured owing to the stairs being out of repair:—Held: there was a duty on deft., both towards the tenants & towards those persons who came to the premises on business with them to keep the stairs in a reasonably safe state of repair; & therefore, deft. was liable to pltf.—*MILLER v. 2381. ————Defts. owned a block of flats which they let to various tenants, defts. keeping possession & control of the common staircase giving access to the flats. The stairs were made of cement reinforced by iron bars embedded in the cement & running along the whole length of the tread. Owing to the wearing away of the cement, in some cases irregular depressions were scooped out behind the iron bars. Pltf., who lodged with her sister in a flat on the fourth floor, of which the sister's husband was tenant, whilst descending the stairs, caught her heel in a depression so formed, & fell & was injured. In an action for damages against defts. the trial judge found that defts. were not guilty of negligence; that the state of the staircase was not dangerous at the time of the accident; that the depression which caused pltf. to fall was not in the nature of a concealed danger or trap, but was obvious, & could have been seen by pltf. if she had looked:—Held: the only duty owed by defts. to pltf. was not to expose her to a concealed

r. ————Where premises sub-let—Whether obligation on landlord or mid-tenant.—A landlord let a block of buildings to a tenant who sub-let the houses. A child visiting one of the sub-tenants met with an accident through the defective condition of the railings of an outside stair which constituted the approach to two of the houses. The father of the child sued both the landlord & the mid-tenant staircase was in darkness, failed to find his way out through the street door into the street, & going further down the stairs towards the basement, fell through a door opening upon a flagged courtyard at some distance above the level of the flagstones. This door was used for hoisting goods into & out of the building. In an action brought by pltf. against deft. in respect of injuries resulting from the fall:—Held: there was no duty towards pltf. imposed upon deft. to light the staircase, & consequently the action was not maintainable.—*HUGGETT v. 2387. ———. [Pltf., a fishmonger's assistant, was employed to deliver fish to a tenant of deft., the owner of a block of flats. By the terms of his agreements with his tenants deft. contracted to provide the lighting necessary for the staircase & hall of the flats. At 5.10 p.m. on Nov. 23, pltf., who had never been to the flats before, entered the tradesmen's entrance & descended a winding flight of steps. At the bottom of the steps he found a small open archway, beneath which was a flagstone some 3 ft. or 4 ft. across. He stepped on to the flagstone & took one step forward, which brought him just under the archway which was in darkness, although means for lighting the same were in existence. Pltf. stretched out his right hand in order to feel which way to go, & moved slightly forward, with the result that he fell down a flight of stairs, not owing to any defect in the stairs, & sustained injuries:—Held: there was no evidence of negligence on the part of deft. to go to the jury, there being no invitation to pltf. to walk down a staircase which was in darkness, & of the condition of which he was perfectly aware.—LEWIS v. RONALD (1909), 101 L. T. 534; 26 T. L. R. 30; 54 Sol. Jo. 32, D. C.]

2388. Right of tenant to enjoyment of staircase—Removal by landlord—Payment of compensation—Injunction.—[Pltf. in this case was lessee of a set of rooms in a large building, under a lease from deft. co. for seven years from Michaelmas 1891. The lease expressly demised the rooms together, in common with the other tenants of the lessor, with the use of the entrance hall & stairs leading to the said rooms; & the co. covenanted for quiet enjoyment of the premises thereby demised together with the use of the said entrance hall & stairs. In 1893 some application was made by deft. co. to pltf. to consent to an alteration of the staircase, but he refused to do so except on terms which the co. did not accept. On Mar. 4, 1895, defts., M. & P., to whom the co. had shortly before leased the greater part of the building for the purposes of a club, began to pull down the staircase. Pltf. was away from his rooms at the time, he returned on Mar. 7. An action was commenced on that day, but the writ & notice of motion were not actually served till the afternoon of Mar. 8, by which time the staircase had been pulled down. Pltf. amended his notice of motion by asking for a mandatory injunction restraining defts. from permitting the staircase to remain removed. The evidence showed that there was access by another staircase to pltf.'s rooms, but it was admittedly circuitous, & as pltf. alleged, inconvenient:—Held: pltf. had a legal right to the enjoyment of the staircase, which defts. could not be allowed to take away by payment of compensation; he would therefore be entitled to a mandatory injunction at the hearing, & as there was no ground for supposing that any fresh evidence could be adduced at the hearing, it ought to be granted on this motion.—ALLPORT v. SECURITIES CORPN. (1895), 64 L. J. Ch. 491; 72 L. T. 533; 11 T. L. R. 310; 39 Sol. Jo. 362; 13 R. 420.

2389. Flooding from rain water—Extent of landlord's liability.—[Pltfs. hired of deft. the ground floor of a warehouse, the upper part of which was occupied by deft. himself. The water from the roof was collected by gutters into a box, from which it was discharged by a pipe into the drains. A hole was made in the box by a rat, through which the water entered the warehouse & wetted pltfs.' goods. Deft. had used reasonable care in examining & seeing to the security of the gutters & the box. In an action by pltfs. against deft. for the damage so caused:—Held: deft. was not liable, either on the ground of an implied contract, or on the ground that he had brought the water to the place from which it entered the warehouse.—*CARSTAIRS v. A rain water gutter in the roof, the possession & control of which was retained by defts., became stopped up. Notice of the stoppage was given by pltfs. to defts., but defts. neglected to have the gutter cleared out till after the lapse of four or five days from the receipt of the notice, & in the meantime pltfs. had suffered damage by reason of rain water having found its way into their premises in consequence of the stoppage:—Held: the fact of the gutter being under the control of defts. imposed upon them a duty to take care that it was not in such a condition as to cause damage to pltfs., & as they had notice of its being stopped up & neglected to clear it out within a reasonable time after the receipt of the notice, they were guilty of a want of due care, & were consequently responsible for the damage done.—*HARGROVES, ARONSON & CO. v. to keep the roof in repair, & is liable to the tenant in damages if the flat is not reasonably inhabitable by reason of non-repair of the roof. Such damages cannot, however, be set off against a claim for rent.

A landlord, who had let an unfurnished top floor flat to a tenant, but who had retained control of the roof of the building, sued the tenant for the two last quarters' rent due under his agreement of tenancy. During this period heavy snow storms occurred, causing snow water to flow into the flat through cracks in the roof, & rendering the flat not reasonably inhabitable. The tenant accordingly removed from the flat to other apartments before the expiration of his tenancy, & counterclaimed for damages caused by non-repair of roof:—Held: the landlord had used reasonable care to keep the roof in repair, but there was imposed on him an absolute duty to do so, & in consequence of his breach the tenant was entitled to damages for discomfort & interference with his tenancy & for the cost of substituted rooms.—*HART v. 2392. ————].—The owner of a block of flats let one of the top flats to a tenant, but kept the roof of the building & the guttering appurtenant thereto in his own possession & control. The guttering became defective, & rain water which should have been carried away escaped & flowed upon the wall of the tenant's flat & made the flat so damp that the tenant suffered injury to her health & sustained damage. The landlord had notice of the defect, but was dilatory & negligent in remedying it:—Held: deft. was under an obligation to take reasonable care to remedy defects in the roof & guttering of which he had notice & which were a source of damage to pltf.; & even if this duty was purely contractual it was not modified or excluded by the fact that the landlord had expressly agreed in the contract of tenancy to keep the staircases, passages, & landings in good repair.—COCKBURN v. SMITH, [1924] 2 K. B. 119; 93 L. J. K. B. 704; 131 L. T. 334; 40 T. L. R. 476; 68 Sol. Jo. 631, C. A.

2393. Roof used as drying ground—By leave of landlord—Duty to fence & repair fence.—Deft. was the landlord of a house which was let out in apartments to several tenants, each of whom had the privilege of using the roof, which was flat & covered with lead, having an iron rail on its outer edge, for the purpose of drying their linen; the access to the roof being by means of a low door at the stairhead about two feet from the rail. Pltf., the occupier of one of the rooms, went upon the roof for the purpose of removing some linen, when, his foot slipping, & the rail being out of repair (& known by the landlord to be so), he fell through to the courtyard below, & was injured:—Held: the mere licence to the lodgers to use the roof as a drying ground imposed no duty upon deft. to fence it or to keep the fence in repair.—IVAY v. HEDGES (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 80, D. C.

SUB-SECT. 4.—ENTRANCE HALL AND LIFT.

2394. Entrance hall—Extent of tenant's right of user—Reasonable user.—Defts., who were the owners of a large building in the City of London containing business offices, granted to pltf. a lease for twenty-one years of a set of offices in the building, & defts. covenanted to keep in good repair the main walls of the building & the passages & other internal parts used in common by the tenants of the various offices. The building had an entrance door 10 ft. wide leading to a hall 17 ft. 9 in. wide which opened by an archway 6 ft. wide into an inner hall. Pltf., for the purpose of making shops, proposed to reduce the passage way from the entrance door through the hall to a uniform width of 6 ft. In an action for an injunction to restrain defts. from so doing:—Held: pltf. had not a right to go over every part of the surface of the hall, but had a right to a reasonable user of the way for the purpose of the reasonable enjoyment of their offices, & upon the evidence a passage 6 ft. wide was not sufficient for the purpose.—STRICK & CO., LTD. v. CITY OFFICES CO., LTD. (1906), 22 T. L. R. 667.

2395. Lift—Landlord's liability for injury therefrom.—STEER v. ST. JAMES'S RESIDENTIAL CHAMBERS CO. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 500.

2396. ————].—The owners of certain flats provided for the convenience of their tenants a lift for the purpose of being used for the delivery of goods by tradesmen. The lift was in the form of a box with a weight on the top, & was pulled up & down from below. It ran outside the building in iron grooves & communicated with the scullery windows of the different flats. Pltf., a domestic servant employed by a tenant of one of the flats, was summoned to the lift to receive some goods. She was engaged in taking the articles from the lift when it was pulled down from below & she was injured. The lift which was of a usual pattern, was not out of repair at the time, & had been in use for eighteen years without any accident having occurred. The jury found that the owners of the flats were guilty of a breach of duty in supplying & maintaining a lift which was a source of danger to those likely to use it, & judgment was entered for pltf.:—Held: upon the above facts defts. had not been guilty of any negligence, & pltf. was not entitled to recover.—POWELL v. THORNDIKE (1910), 102 L. T. 600; 26 T. L. R. 399, D. C.

b. Entrance hall—Extent of landlord's obligation towards tenants.—Where a lessor leases only certain rooms of a building, retaining possession & control of the halls, staircases & approaches of the building, the only implied obligation towards his tenants & their employees is to provide a reasonably safe access to the building, i.e., an access which is not in the nature of a trap & does not contain any concealed danger.—ERICKSON v. TRADERS' BUILDING ASSOC. (1916),

c. ————]. Alterations by landlord—Causing inconvenience to tenant.—The proprietor of an urban tenement let to the tenant the second flat of the house for writing-chambers, the access to the flat being by a door from the street, through a passage & up a common stair. After the tenant had entered upon his lease, the landlord made an opening for a door in the inner wall at the end of the passage, for the purpose of obtaining access from the street to a printing establishment:—Held: the tenant was entitled to interdict against the use so proposed to be made of the passage.—ALEXANDER v. COWPER (1846), 3 Dunal. (Cl. of Sess.) 249; 16 Fac. Coll. 193.—SCOT.

2398. What words will pass.—Lessee for years of the pannage of the Park of H. grants all his goods & chattels, movable & immovable, within the said Park :—Held: the lease of the pannage passeth by these words.—ANON. (1572), 3 Leon. 19; Dal. 82; 74 E. R. 514.

2400. Power of highway authority to let—Pasturage on roads—Tenant's right of action for disturbance.—By an award made under an Inclosure Act, passed in 1766, two private roads, E. & H., were set out. About 1818, the road E. became a public highway. Down to 1863, the surveyors of highways for the parish of C., within which E. & H. were situate, had from time to time let the pasturage upon E. & H. to various persons. A local board was formed in 1863 for the parish of C. who in 1876 let the pasturage upon E. & H. to pltf. He thereupon commenced to depasture the herbage with his cattle on the roads. Deft. interfered with pltf.'s enjoyment of the pasturage. By Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 4, a street includes any highway. By sect. 144 every local board are within their district surveyors of highways. By sect. 149, all streets shall vest in & be under the control of the local board :—Held: (1) by force of the above enactment the property in the soil of E. being a "street" so far vested in the local board that they could demise the right of pasturage thereon to pltf., who was entitled to maintain an action; (2) the local board having no power to demise H., being a private way, pltf. had not sufficient exclusive possession as occupier to enable him to maintain an action.—COVERDALE v. CHARLTON (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 104; 48 L. J. Q. B. 128; 40 L. T. 88; 43 J. P. 268; 27 W. R. 257, C. A.

2404. Power of re-entry on lessee's bankruptcy.—Where a lessee, by an agreement for a lease, stipulated that he would not assign other than to a responsible person, to be approved of by the lessor, & not to assign by way of mtge. or deposit for money to be lent, & declared that other provisions usually inserted in leases of similar property should be introduced into the lease :—Held: the agreement would sanction the extension of a proviso for re-entry by the lessor if the lessee should become bkpt. or insolvent, or make any assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or if any sale or assignment of the premises should be attempted under any execution against the lessee.—HAINES v. BURNETT (1859), 27 Beav. 500; 29 L. J. Ch. 289; 1 L. T. 18; 24 J. P. 4; 5 Jur. N. S. 1279; 8 W. R. 130; 51 E. R. 198.

2405. Assignment to be registered with ground landlord—Payment of fee for registration.—By a contract for the sale of a public-house, the vendor agreed to assign & the purchaser agreed to take the lease, "subject to the yearly rent of £90 & the performance of the covenants thereby reserved & contained, such covenants being common & usual in leases of public-houses." Upon investigating the title, the purchaser found that the lease under which the premises were held contained this clause: "Provided always & these presents are upon this express condition, that all & every underlease, deed of assignment, etc., which shall be made & executed during the term, shall be left with the solr. of the ground landlord within two months of its date, for the purpose of registration, & a fee of one guinea paid for such registration," & a power of re-entry in case of "breach or non-performance of any of the covenants or other stipulations hereinbefore contained or referred to." The purchaser refused to complete, on the ground that this was not a common & usual covenant; & the jury so found :—Held: whether the proviso in the head lease was a "covenant" in the strict sense or not, it was at all events a covenant within the contemplation of the agreement, & therefore the purchaser was not bound to complete.—BROOKES v. DRYSDALE (1877), 3 C. P. D. 52; 87 L. T. 467; 26 W. R. 331.

2406. Residence on premises & personal conduct of business.—An agreement for the lease of a public-house, provided for a term of three years, with an option to renew for another seven years, & for possession to be given "within one month from this date," but contained no reference as to the covenants to be inserted in the lease. The lessor insisted upon covenants by the lessee, (a) to reside on the premises & personally conduct the business; (b) not to assign without consent; & that the proviso for re-entry should extend to the breach of any covenant. The lessee objected that these were not "usual" clauses:—Held: covenants a & b could not be insisted upon as usual covenants; &, on this point, the fact that the subject-matter of the lease was a public-house, made no difference, & the proviso for re-entry must be limited to the case of non-payment of rent.—Re LANDER & BAGLEY'S CONTRACT, [1892] 3 Ch. 41; 61 L. 2410. — Intention of assignee not to reside thereon.]—In 1895 defts. by an underlease demised a public-house known as "The Porcupine" for a term of forty-five years from Mar. 25, 1895, at a certain rent. The underlessee covenanted (inter alia), not to assign or underlet the premises without the written licence of defts. & S. (the head lessor) first had & obtained, but the licence of defts. should not be arbitrarily withheld provided the licence from S. was obtained, & that the underlessee or the tenant or occupier of the premises for the time being should purchase all malt liquors to be sold or consumed on the premises from defts., but there was no covenant by the underlessee to reside on the premises or to carry on the business of a licensed victualler. There was the usual power of re-entry on breach of any of the covenants.

In 1919 the underlease was vested in pltf's, who did not reside on the premises, & they contracted to sell the underlease to A., & applied to S. & defts. for their written licence to the transaction. A. was of German origin, but in 1912 had become a naturalised British subject & was in other respects a responsible & respectable person.

S. gave his written licence, but defts. refused for these reasons: (a) that the purchaser's name & nationality of origin would tend to depreciate the trade of the house; (b) that in accordance with the regulations or requirements of licensing justices defts. now required that their licensees should be resident on their licensed premises, & that the purchaser had stated that it was not his intention to reside on the premises; & (c) that the purchaser was interested in other licensed & business premises & consequently could not give the attention & supervision to "The Porcupine" that should be bestowed upon it:—Held: pltf's. were entitled to assign the underlease to A. without the written licence of defts., for that in the circumstances their refusal was wholly unreasonable.—*MILLS v. SUB-SECT. 3.—(COVENANT TO MAINTAIN LICENSE.

A. In General.

2413. Covenant not implied—Parol letting.]—Upon the letting by parol of a public-house there is no implied agreement or covenant that the tenant shall do no act whereby the license shall become forfeited.

A. took by parol a licensed public-house of B., but having been three times convicted of offences connected with the management of such house the magistrates refused to renew the license. Upon an action by B. against A. upon his implied covenant not to suffer the premises to be used in a manner calculated to produce a forfeiture of the license:—Held: no such covenant could be implied, & the action could not be maintained.—*MAW v. 2414. —.]—LACON & CO. v. LACEBY (1897), 41 Sol. Jo. 405.

2415. — Reversionary lease.]—A reversionary lease was granted to deft. by pltf.'s predecessor for a term of years to take effect on the determination of the tenancy of the then tenant. One of the covenants of such lease was that the lessee should, during the continuance of the term thereby granted, use the demised premises as & for a fully licensed public-house only so long as the necessary license could be obtained for that purpose. The license was forfeited during the tenancy of the tenant, & before the date of the commencement of deft.'s lease. The premises accordingly were greatly depreciated:—Held: there was no implied condition in the lease that the premises should be maintained as a fully licensed public-house at the commencement of deft.'s lease, & deft. was therefore liable for the rent reserved under the lease.—BLUM v. ANSLEY (1900), 64 J. P. 184; 16 T. L. R. 249.

whatever whereby the license or licenses should or might be suspended, discontinued, forfeited, or be in any danger of being suspended, discontinued, or forfeited." The lease contained a clause of re-entry for breach of covenant. A person who occupied by leave of the lessee was convicted of selling drink within prohibited hours, but the conviction was not indorsed on the license. The assignee of the reversion on the lease having brought an action to enforce the right of re-entry on the ground of a breach of covenant:—Held: (1) the covenant ran with the land, & might be enforced by the assignee of the reversion; (2) in the circumstances there had been no breach of the covenant.—FLEETWOOD v. HULL (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 35; 58 L. J. Q. B. 341; 60 L. T. 790; 54 J. P. 229; 37 W. R. 714; 5 T. L. R. 420.

2417. Absolute covenant — Binding lessee & assigns.—Where a lease of a public-house contains a covenant whereby the lessee for himself & his assigns covenants with the lessor & his assigns in manner following—that is to say: "the lessee will at all times during the continuance of this demise use & keep open the said premises as a licensed public-house for the sale of ale, wife, beer & spirits therein, & will so conduct & manage the same as to afford no reasonable or lawful ground or pretence for the justices refusing to renew, indorsing, or objecting to renewal of the licenses now attached to the said premises for the sale of ale, wines & spirituous liquors, & which licenses are hereby agreed & declared to be the property of the lessor, but any indorsement which may be made on the said licenses shall not be deemed a breach of the covenant contained in this clause if the conviction in respect of which such indorsement shall have been made is reversed or annulled on appeal"—the covenant is an absolute one that the license shall not be endangered by any one, & therefore if a sub-lessee by demise of the public-house is convicted of opening the house in prohibited hours the covenant is broken & the lessor & his assigns will be liable at the suit of the lessor for the breach.—MUMFORD v. WALKER (1901), 71 L. J. K. B. 19; 85 L. T. 518; 18 T. L. R. 80.

2418. Covenant to give no ground for "discontinuing license"—Interpretation of "discontinuing"—Applicable to forfeiture only—Not non-renewal.—(1) The lessee of a public-house covenanted to conduct the business so as to afford no ground for "discontinuing the license":—Held: read with the context "discontinuing" meant not refusing to renew but forfeiting the license.

(2) Accordingly where licensing justices refused to renew a license in consequence of objection made that the licensee had been convicted for permitting drunkenness, & that four men had been convicted for being drunk on the premises on that occasion:—Held: this did not amount to a breach of the covenant & therefore the covenantor was not liable in damages.

It is quite clear that the word "wilfully" governs the word "suffer" as well as the word "do" & it cannot be contended that resps. did or wilfully suffered anything which could be considered a breach of the licensing laws & regulations (LORD MACNAGHTEN).—BRYANT v. HANCOCK & Co., [1899] A. C. 442; 68 L. J. Q. B. 889; 81 L. T. 96; 64 J. P. 84; 15 T. L. R. 400, H. L.

2419. Form of covenant—Where licensee holding under agreement for lease—License forfeited before lease granted.—The lease of a public-house contained usual covenants to keep up licenses, etc. The lessor & lessee entered into an agreement for a new lease to contain covenants "similar to" those in the former lease. Under this agreement the lessee retained possession of the public-house for several years, & in the interim forfeited the license, which was not renewed. Specific performance of the agreement was decreed against the lessee but no inquiry was directed as to damages occasioned by breach of the covenant to keep up the licenses. The lessor having insisted that he was entitled to insert in the new lease a covenant by the lessee to keep up the licenses similar to that in the former lease:—Held: he was not entitled to such a covenant but only to a covenant that the lessee would use his best endeavours to obtain a license, & would, if he obtained it, then keep up the same in the terms of the old covenant.—SHEPHEARD v. WALKER (1876), 34 L. T. 230.

2420. Continuance of obligation—Non-renewal of license.—By an indenture of lease made in 1895 ptff. demised to deft. certain premises described as "all that beerhouse & premises with the bakehouse in the rear" for a term of twenty-one years. The lease contained covenants by deft. to continue the premises as a beerhouse at all times during the term & not to use the premises or permit them to be used in any other manner than as a beerhouse without the consent of ptff. The house had been licensed as a beerhouse since before the passing of Wine & Beerhouse Act, 1869 (c. 27). In 1905 the renewal of the license was refused under Licensing Act, 1904 (c. 23), on the ground that it was not necessary for the requirements of the neighbourhood, & in Aug. 1907, compensation was paid to ptff. & deft. In an action to recover a half-year's rent due in Jan. 1908:—Held: the non-renewal of the license had not the effect of putting an end to the lease, & deft. was therefore liable for the rent.—GRIMSDICK v. SWEETMAN, [1909] 2 K. B. 740; 78 L. J. K. B. 1162; 101 L. T. 278; 73 J. P. 450; 25 T. L. R. 750; 53 Sol. Jo. 717, D. C.

The lease of the premises having been assigned to deft., he underlet them to an underlessee, who was convicted of an offence against the licensing laws, by reason of which the renewal of the licenses was refused. In an action by plff., as assignee of the reversion, against deft., as assignee of the lease, for breach of the above-mentioned covenant:—Held: the sub-lessee not being the servant or agent of deft., the latter could not be said to have done or suffered to be done the act by reason of which the license was not renewed, & therefore the action was not maintainable.—WILSON v. The lessees having underlet the premises, the underlessee was convicted of an offence against the licensing laws, by reason of which the renewal of the licenses was refused. The lessee having threatened to do certain acts inconsistent with the first branch of the covenant, the lessor obtained an ex p. injunction, restraining him from discontinuing to use & keep open the premises as an inn, & from doing any act whereby the licenses might become forfeited or be refused. But the injunction was afterwards dissolved, the ct. having no jurisdiction to restrain a person from discontinuing to use premises as an inn, which was the same in effect as ordering him to keep an inn; & no intention having been shown on the part of deft. to violate the negative part of the covenant.—HOOPER v. Owing to loss of business during the war defts. proposed to close the hotel for the time being, but to continue the restaurant. On an application by plffs. for an interim injunction to restrain defts. from closing the hotel:—Held: as the effect of the injunction would be to order defts. to carry on the business of the hotel & it was not the practice to grant such an injunction the application must be refused.—LONDON, CHATHAM & DOVER RY. SUB-SECT. 4.—TIED HOUSE COVENANTS.

A. In General.

2445. Validity of covenant.—(1) A condition in a deed of composition, that a publican shall continue to deal for twelve years with his creditors in the articles of their respective trades, may be void. But it is qualified by the implied condition, that their articles shall be good & marketable. (2) Contracts by which brewers bind publicans to deal with them are not to be favoured, as tending to prejudice the health of the subject.—THORNTON v. SHERRATT (1818), 8 Taunt. 529; 129 E. R. 488.

2446. ——Pltf., a brewer, sold a piece of land to the trustees of a freehold land society, who covenanted with him that he, his heirs & assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying beer to any public-house erected on the land, but pltf. did not enter into any covenant to supply it. Deft., a member of the society, who was also a brewer, acquired a portion of the land with notice of the covenant, & erected on it a public-house which he supplied with his own beer. Pltf. filed his bill to restrain deft. from supplying beer, alleging that pltf. had always been ready to furnish a sufficient supply of good beer at a fair price:—Held: (1) the covenant was not void either for uncertainty or want of mutuality, or as being an unreasonable restraint of trade, or because it purported to be perpetual; (2) though it was in terms positive, it was in substance negative, & the ct. could interfere by injunction to restrain deft. from acting in contravention of it.—CATT v. TOURLE (1869), 4 Ch. the business from the lessors, a proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent, or non-performance of the covenants, & a provision for reduction of the rent so long as the lessee should purchase beer from the lessors:—Held: the covenant to purchase beer was an absolute one, & the lessee had not the alternative of dealing with a rival brewer & paying the unreduced rent.—HANBURY v. CUNDY (1887), 58 L. See Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), ss. 78, 79, 141, 142.

Covenants running with the land generally, see Part XI., s. 6, post.

2448. General rule.—Messrs. A. & B., who were brewers, carrying on their business at the X. Brewery, demised a public-house to deft. by an indenture of lease, in which the term “lessors” was defined to include each of the Messrs. A. & B., “& their each & every of their heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns,” & the term “lessee” was defined to include the “exors., administrators, & permitted assigns” of the lessee. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee with the lessors that he would not during the term, directly or indirectly, buy, sell, or dispose of upon the premises any ales or stout “other than such as shall have been bond fide purchased of the said lessors, or from them or either of them, either alone or jointly with any other person or persons who may hereafter become a partner or partners with them or either of them, provided they or he shall at such time deal in or vend such liquors as aforesaid & be willing to supply the same to the lessee of good quality & at the fair current market price.” A. & B. afterwards sold & assigned their brewery, plant, business, & goodwill to C., a brewer carrying on business at the Y. Brewery, & assigned to him the public-house & the benefit of the covenant with reference to the sale of beer. About the same time A. & B. dissolved partnership, & ceased to carry on business at the X. Brewery, which was shortly afterwards shut up. Deft. did not take his beer from C., & in an action brought by A., B., & C., as co-pltfs., to restrain deft. from selling any beer other than beer purchased from C., either directly or through A. & B. The ct. after holding that A. & B., having ceased to carry on business, were not entitled to relief, granted an injunction in favour of C. in the terms of the covenant. On appeal by deft.:—Held: (1) upon the construction of the covenant, the benefit of it was not restricted either to assigns carrying on the same brewer’s business as the lessors, or to assigns who themselves made beer; (2) the covenant was not a personal covenant incapable of assignment, but a covenant relating to the way in which the business at a particular house was to be carried on, & accordingly a covenant running with the land, & enforceable by the owner of the reversion on the lease; (3) whether the covenant was one running with the land or not, pltf. C., as assignee of the benefit of it, was entitled to enforce it, upon the ground that deft., having presumably obtained a lease of the house at a lower rent by reason of the restrictive covenant, ought to be restrained from dealing with the house in a way inconsistent with that covenant.

Then comes a question as to whether this contract is one which can be enforced in equity, having regard to the doctrine relating to specific performance & injunctions. If you treat the covenant to keep open this place as a public-house & to sell beer there as an affirmative covenant, you cannot treat the covenant as to the buying of beer as merely an affirmative covenant to buy beer of the lessors. You must put in the words, "& the lessors exclusively." If you get that, you get a negative portion of the covenant which can be properly enforced consistently with the doctrine applicable to cases of this kind; & therefore whether you regard it as an affirmative covenant with a negative element in it, or whether you regard it as split up, as it is here, into these two parts, partly affirmative & partly negative, that negative part can be properly enforced (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*CLEGG v. 2449. — Severance of business from reversion.]
—WHITE v. SOUTHERN HOTEL CO., No. 2460, post.

2450. ——The owner of a leasehold public-house, subject to a first mtge., made a second mtge. to the partners in "J. Brothers," brewers, in consideration of an advance by them out of their partnership account, the partners being first described separately & afterwards referred to as J. Brothers.

By a separate deed of the same date, made between the same parties described as in the second mtge., the mtgor. in further consideration of the advance covenanted with "J. Brothers, their exors., administrators, & assigns," to bind the house to "J. Brothers" for the entire supply of beer, wines & spirits so long as he, his exors., administrators or assigns should be in possession or occupation.

Both mtges. were subsequent to the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41).

The transferee of the first mtge. & the assign of the equity of redemption, then in possession having together made an underlease to deft., a publican, with notice of the covenant, pltf., who had purchased the business of J. Brothers together with their right of supply to the public-house, & had taken a transfer of the second mtge. & an assignment of the benefit of the deed of covenant, sought to enforce the tie against deft.:—Held: on the construction & intention of the deeds

(1) the benefit of the covenant was not limited to the original firm of J. Brothers, but ran with their business; (2) the covenant bound any one deriving title under the original mtgor., including an underlessee with notice, who, though not an assign, could be bound in equity by a restrictive covenant; (3) deft., though apparently deriving title to his underlease under the first mtgee. as well as under the mtgor. in possession, must be considered to hold under the better title, which, having regard to s. 18 (1) of Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), was that derived from the mtgor. in possession. He could not, therefore, set up the paramount title of the first mtgee. against *pltf.*s.

(4) On the above grounds *pltf.*s. were entitled to enforce the tie against *deft.*s.

The words [successors & assigns] are not essential, as that intention may be gathered from other indications (KEKEWICH, J.).—JOHN BROTHERS ABERGARW BREWERY CO. v. HOLMES, [1900] 1 Ch. 188; 69 L. J. Ch. 149; 81 L. T. 771; 64 J. P. 153; 48 W. R. 236; 44 Sol. Jo. 132.

" & their successors in business." The covenant did not mention "assigns." B. & Co. did not execute the agreement, & there was nothing on the face of it to show that they were brewers. They were, in fact, brewers, & A. occupied the hotel under the agreement as their tenant & purchased beer of them. In 1899 B. & Co. sold & conveyed their brewery, tied houses, including the hotel, & business to C. & Co., who were brewers, & who incorporated B. & Co.'s business with their own. After the sale B. & Co. ceased to carry on business. Notice of the change of ownership was given by C. & Co. to A., & for a time he purchased beer of them. In an action by C. & Co. to restrain A. from committing a breach of the covenant:—Held: (1) the covenant was not personal to B. & Co., but ran with the land, & C. & Co., as successors in business of B. & Co. & owners of the reversion in fee of the hotel, were entitled to the benefit of it; (2) C. & Co., as assigns of B. & Co., being clearly entitled against A. to specific performance of the agreement under which he was in possession of the hotel, could sue him on the covenant in the same manner as they could have done, if B. & Co. had actually executed the original agreement. Semble: the benefit of the covenant was a chose in action, assignable in equity before Jud. Act, 1873, & by virtue of s. 25 (6) of that Act the covenant could after an absolute assignment thereof in writing & due notice given, be sued upon by the assignee.—*MANCHESTER BREWERY CO. v. In an action upon the above covenant, pltfs. assigned as a breach that G. while tenant of the Punch Bowl, did not purchase all the ale, etc., consumed on the premises from pltfs., but purchased it from deft. & from divers other persons to pltfs. unknown:—Held: this breach was well assigned.

2456. — Reversion on lease vested in brewers—Original lessor still carrying on business as brewer.]—A lessor, described as a brewer, leased to deft.'s predecessors in title a beerhouse for a term of fourteen years, & the lessee covenanted that he, his exors., administrators, & assigns, & all other persons for the time being carrying on the business of a beer retailer or publican upon the premises, would during the term deal exclusively “with the lessor or his firm or his or their successors in business” for all beers, etc., sold upon the premises. The lease provided that, where the context allowed, the word “lessor” should include the exors., administrators, & assigns of the lessor. The reversion expectant on the lease became vested in pltfs., who were brewers, & the lease became vested in deft. The firm of the original lessor were still carrying on business as brewers, & were willing to supply deft., who was willing to deal with them:—Held: the context did not allow of the insertion of the words “exors., administrators, & assigns” after the word “lessor” in the covenant to deal exclusively with the lessor, etc., & there was no breach of the covenant so long as deft. dealt with the firm of the original lessor, & no obligation on him to take his beer from pltfs.—*BIRMINGHAM BREWERIES, LTD. v. 2460. Assignee not named in covenant.]—A lease by a wine merchant of an hotel for thirty years at a rent of £1,500 a year contained a covenant by the lessee with the lessor, his heirs & assigns, that he, the lessee, would not during the term buy or sell on the premises any foreign wines other than should have been supplied by the lessor, his successors or assigns; & it was provided that so long as the lessee should observe this covenant the lessor should allow the lessee an abatement of £75 from each quarter's rent.

The lessor died during the term. Pltfs., who were his exors., sold his wine business to the firm of W. & P.; & the lessee assigned the lease of the hotel to defts. Defts. claimed that, so long as they continued to buy wines from W. & P., they were entitled to the abatement from each quarter's rent; but pltfs. insisted that, when the ownership of the wine business & the ownership of the reversion upon the lease were severed, the covenant to buy wines ceased to be operative, & consequently that defts. were not entitled to the benefit of the proviso:—Held: (1) although the covenant to buy wines did not in terms include the assigns of the lessee, the burden of it ran with the tenant's interest under the lease; (2) the assigns of the lessee were still bound by the covenant & entitled to the benefit of the proviso for abatement of rent.—*WHITE v. liquors sold & consumed at the S. Arms, & also at the M. Arms, of plffs. Plffs. covenanted on their part to supply all the malt liquors so required, & that they should be of a certain quality & at a certain price. In 1874 the M. Arms was assigned by C. to deft., with notice of the covenant. Deft. then mortgaged the lease to plffs. to secure the repayment of money borrowed by him from them, & covenanted during the residue of his term to buy all the malt liquors brought into the M. Arms of plffs., whether he repaid the money or not. Deft. repaid the money & then refused to fulfill his covenant:—Held: deft. was an assignee with notice of the covenant in the lease of 1874, & therefore it was binding on him in equity; but it was conditional on plffs. fulfilling their covenant; & the covenant by deft. in the mtge. was subject to an implied obligation on the part of plffs. to supply good marketable beer.—LUKER v. D. Condition as to Price.

2467. Implied covenant—To supply at fair & reasonable prices.]—A tenant's covenant in a brewer's lease of a tied house not to sell on the demised premises any malt liquors other than such as shall have been purchased from the landlord imports an implied covenant by the landlord to supply malt liquors of good quality & at fair & reasonable prices. Such a tenant's covenant was contained in pltf.'s lease of one of their tied houses in the London metropolitan area, & deft. was the assignee of the lease. In June, 1909, in consequence of the increased license duties proposed in the Finance Bill of that year, plffs. & substantially all the London brewers agreed to raise the price of beers 6s. a barrel to the trade, leaving the trade to recoup themselves by raising the retail price to the public one farthing per half-pint. The increased prices were agreed to by the trade generally but deft. refused to pay them & purchased his malt liquors elsewhere at the old prices. In an action by plffs. to restrain deft. from committing a breach of his covenant:—Held: under the circumstances the increased prices were fair & reasonable, & plffs. were entitled to an injunction.

Qu.: as to the meaning to be attributed to the words "current market prices" in a landlord's covenant in such a lease.—COURAGE & CO., LTD. v. CARPENTER, [1910] 1 Ch. 262; 79 L. J. Ch. 184; 101 L. T. 940; 26 T. L. R. 196.

2468. "Fair current market price"—How ascertained.]—Plffs., who were brewers & wine & spirit merchants, let a licensed house to deft., who covenanted to buy from them all liquors for consumption on the premises which they should be willing to supply at "the fair current market price." Plffs. issued price lists, & supplied the ordinary public at the full price on the list, & they supplied "free" licensed houses at a discount of 20 per cent. They allowed deft. & the tenants of their other tied houses a discount of 10 per cent. These were the usual prices charged by brewers generally:—Held: the words "fair current market price" meant a price which was fair & current in the case of tied houses, & which was not in excess of the general market rate, & the price did not cease to be fair & current because the tenants of free houses, who were exceptionally circumstanced, obtained lower prices by special bargain.—PERUETT & CO., LTD. v. RADFORD (1901), 17 T. L. R. 301.

2470. "Fair market price"—How ascertained.]—Resp. was the lessee of a public-house in London of which appts., a firm of brewers, were the owners. By his lease he covenanted that he would deal exclusively with them for all malt liquors which should be sold or consumed on the premises, "provided they shall be willing to supply the same at the fair market price." It was proved that of the public-houses in London about 93 per cent. were "tied" houses, & 7 per cent. were "free" houses, & that the London brewers supplied beers at standard prices, fixed by agreement among themselves, subject to discounts, & that the discounts allowed to "free" houses were larger than those allowed to "tied" houses. In an action brought by appts. to recover the balance of an account for beer supplied to resp., he counterclaimed for sums which he alleged that he had paid to appts. in excess of the fair market price for beer supplied to him. The jury found that there were two market prices—one for tied & one for free houses—and that resp. had been charged the fair market price as applying to a tied house:—Held: the term "market price" in a contract had not a fixed definite legal significance which attached to it invariably, but it must be construed with reference to the context & surrounding circumstances, & resp. was not entitled to recover on the counterclaim.—CHARRINGTON & CO., LTD. v. WOODE, [1914] A. C. 71; 83 L. J. K. B. 220; 110 L. T. 548; 30 T. L. R. 176; 58 Sol. Jo. 152, II. L.

2472. Addition of increase of duty—Lease providing for fixed price.]—By a lease of a public-house the lessee agreed to take from the lessor, who was a brewer, all the beer to be consumed on the premises at a fixed price per barrel. Subsequently additional duty was imposed upon beer. The lessor supplied beer to the lessee from time to time after the additional duty had been imposed. The lessor claimed to add the extra duty to the price of the beer under s. 20 of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (c. 36), & s. 8 of Finance Act, 1900 (c. 7):—Held: as there was a new contract in respect of each order of beer, & as the lease merely fixed the price, the lessor could not recover the extra duty.—*NEWBRIDGE RHONDDA BREWERY CO. v. E. Breach of Covenant.

(a) What Amounts to Breach.

2475. Refusal by lessor to supply.—(1) A covenant by a publican to buy all beer of his landlord's brewers is satisfied by buying as an undisclosed principal through an agent. (2) The publican is relieved from the obligation of such covenant with respect to any article his landlord will not supply. (3) Semble: where such a covenant is entered into by a tenant, there is, in the absence of express stipulation, an implied obligation on the part of the landlord to supply the tenant with such kinds of beer as he requires, & if this obligation is not fulfilled the tenant is at liberty to buy the beer which he requires elsewhere.—EDWICK v. HAWKES (1881), 18 Ch. D. 199; 45 L. T. 168; 29 W. R. 913; sub nom. EDRIDGE v. HAWKER & CO., 50 L. J. Ch. 577.

2476. Purchase as undisclosed principal through agent.—EDWICK v. HAWKES, No. 2475, ante.

2477. Occasional supply inferior in quality.—Pltf. demised a public-house to deft.; deft. to take all his malt of pltf.; pltf. upon every reasonable request to deliver good malt, & if he did not, deft. to be at liberty to buy it of any other. Breach, deft. used a quantity of malt, not bought of pltf., & without requiring pltf. to deliver such. Plea, that pltf. delivered bad malt to deft., who thereupon bought malt of others:—Held: the plea was bad; for as one failure by pltf. would not operate as a total suspension of the covenant, deft. should have alleged a request to send him good malt, & that he had purchased the malt of others on pltf.'s failure to do so.

I think each of these parties has a complete remedy, & must resort to the remedy by action on their respective covenants, & that the breach by pltf. of his covenant is no discharge of the present action (DALLAS, J.).—WEAVER v. SESSIONS (1815), 6 Taunt. 154; 1 Marsh. 505; 128 E. R. 992.

Annotation:—Reffd. Corcoran v. Proser (1873), 22 W. R. 222.

2478. ——.—Deft., a brewer, let to pltf. a public-house, on the terms, among others, that pltf. should purchase of deft. all the malt liquor consumed on the premises: provided that, in case of any breach of that agreement, pltf. should forfeit, as liquidated damages, the sum of £50, secured by the promissory note of pltf. Deft. indorsed over the note for value; & pltf., having been compelled to pay it, entered a plaint in the county ct. against deft., & stated in the summons & particulars that "the cause of action was money paid for the use of deft. to the indorsees of the note, for which he never received from deft. any value or consideration." At the trial before a jury it appeared that, on pltf.'s taking possession of the premises in Oct. 1849, he commenced ordering beer from deft., & continued to do so until Feb. 1850. Pltf. proposed to prove that the beer supplied by deft. subsequently to Christmas, 1849, was unmarketable. This evidence was objected to, but received by the judge. Deft. submitted that there was no case for the jury, & pltf. must be nonsuited. Pltf. refused to be nonsuited: & the judge left it to the jury to say whether the liquor supplied by deft. was of a marketable quality: & they found a verdict for pltf. On appeal, the case, which was stated by the judge, set out his direction to the jury, though not necessary to render intelligible the points of law which he formally submitted for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: under County Courts Act, 1850 (c. 61), ss. 14, 15, the Ct. of Appeal is not confined to the precise questions submitted to them, but may decide upon the whole case as stated; & therefore, looking at the summing up in this case, it was erroneous; for the circumstance of deft. having on one or two occasions supplied pltf. with bad beer, did not authorise him to avoid the contract, but he should have returned the beer, & if better were not sent instead of it, he might, on the particular occasion, procure some elsewhere; & if deft. continued to send bad beer, he might sue him on the implied contract that he would supply beer reasonably fit to be drunk.—STANCLIFFE v. CLARKE (1852), 7 Exch. 439; 1 Saund. & M. 13; 21 L. J. Ex. 129; 16 J. P. 425; 16 Jur. 430; 155 E. R. 1020. Annotation:—Mentd. Kirby v. Williamson (1852), 19 L. T. O. S. 203.

SUB-SECT. 5.—OTHER COVENANTS.

2488. Proviso for lessee to receive goodwill at determination of lease—Valuation.—In Aug. 1845, deft.'s testatrix granted to pltf. a lease of a public-house for fourteen years, at a rent of £70 per annum, the latter paying £300 for the goodwill; & before the expiration of that lease, viz., in Mar. 1858, she granted him a further lease for fourteen years at a rent of £80 per annum. Each of these leases contained the following proviso:—"Provided also, & it is agreed & declared that, at the expiration or other sooner determination of the term hereby granted, all such sum & sums the lessee that at the expiration of the lease he will assign to the lessor the license, if any, then held by him is not a covenant binding upon the assignee of the term as such. It is merely a of money as shall or can be procured for the goodwill of the business of a licensed victualler in respect of the premises from an incoming tenant, shall be received by & belong to the lessee, his exors., etc." The second lease being about to expire, negotiations took place between pltf. & deft. for a renewal, but they failed to come to terms; & deft., with notice of pltf.'s claim under the above proviso, granted a lease of the premises to a new tenant for a term of fourteen years, at a rent of £100 per annum, & a premium of £1,300. Upon a case stated for the opinion of the ct. by an arbitrator, to whom it was to be referred to assess the amount of damages pltf. was entitled to recover for the breach (if any) of the above proviso, upon the principles to be laid down by the ct., it was found as a fact that "the rental of £100 per annum reserved in the lease granted to the new tenant was, without any premium, bonus, or other payment whatever, a full & sufficient rental for the premises under such a lease, whether intended for a licensed victualler's business or not": & further, that "the goodwill of the business carried on by pltf. would, if belonging to the owner of the house, have had a very considerable value, & if such owner had in that case been willing to grant a lease similar to that granted to the new tenant, a sum exceeding £1,300 would without difficulty have been obtained for the goodwill":—Held: the proviso was broken; & the arbitrator was to estimate the damages the pltf. was entitled to recover for such breach, in the same manner as one accustomed to value "goodwill" as between outgoing & incoming tenant would estimate them, & in so doing was not to disregard the increased value of the property in the neighbourhood generally.—*J. 2491. What leases may be granted—Balliwick of manor.]—If the lessee for years of a manor, with exception of wards, marriages, reliefs, etc., afterwards take a lease of the balliwick of the manor, this shall not operate as a surrender of the first lease, notwithstanding the exception is void.—(*GYBSON v. 2492. Usual audience part of theatre.]—By 1 Geo. 4, c. 160, s. 3, the "new renters" of Drury Lane Theatre, or their assigns, are entitled "to the free liberty & privilege of admission into the usual audience part of the theatre," & "in as full & effectual manner as the same hath been & is now enjoyed by the said new renters & their assigns." Since the passing of the above Act, a certain part of the then audience part of the theatre was railed off from the rest & converted into "orchestra stalls" distinctly numbered, fitted up at extra costs, & having a separate entrance. The right of the new renters to free admission to such stalls had been from time to time disputed, but none of them or their assigns had ever brought an action to try such right. Pltf., being the assignee of a new renter's share, had entered the theatre & according to present usage had signed his name in the renters' book, & was given a ticket, marked "renter"; he proceeded towards the dress circle, gave up the ticket to the check taker of the dress circle & passed in, & occupied a seat in the dress circle, which he afterwards desired to change for a seat in the stalls. He conformed to all the regulations of the theatre respecting such change of seat, except that he refused to pay the fee of 2s. as a consideration for the change, which fee was the customary consideration paid by the public for such change. Persisting in his alleged right to pass free into the stalls, he was ejected from the theatre, without any excess of force, by the servants of deft., the lessee of the theatre:—Held:

the stalls were the usual audience part of the theatre, & pltf. was entitled to proceed there in the first instance. But the Act, being framed so as to incorporate a usage, there being no evidence of what that usage was, the present usage must, in the absence of such evidence, be deemed to be good, & therefore deft. was justified in disputing the right claimed, & was entitled to judgment, for pltf. having made his election of the part of the theatre, he intended to go to, & having given up his ticket, in accordance with present usage, became undistinguishable from the paying public, with no rights greater or less than they possessed, & was consequently, not entitled to pass free from the dress circle to the stalls.—DAUNEY v. CHATTERTON (1875), 45 L. J. Q. B. 283; 33 L. T. 628; sub nom. DAWNEY v. CHATTERTON, 40 J. P. 180, C. A.

By another agreement an owner agreed to allow the advertising agent the privilege of erecting an advertising hoarding, the agent to pay a yearly rent & the owner agreed to allow the agent the further privilege of removing a wall, the agreement to remain in force for three years, & be afterwards terminable by twelve months' notice, but if the owner should be obliged to give less than twelve months' notice he agreed to refund £20. In both agreements the dimensions of the hoardings to be erected were specified. Advertising hoardings supported on posts fixed into the ground were erected. In the first case the structure was used partly by the owner as a shed & partly by the advertising agent as a hoarding; in the second case, exclusively by the agent as a hoarding:—Held: each of the agreements created a tenancy, & conferred an exclusive occupation & not merely a licence & therefore the advertising agent was liable to be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of both hoardings as occupier of advertising stations.—*TAYLOR v. SECT. 2.—USUAL COVENANTS—WHAT ARE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2495. Usual or proper covenants—Such as secure full effect of contract.—Qu.: Whether under an agreement for a lease, containing all proper covenants, a covenant against assigning or under-letting should be included.

There is no covenant almost, which a landlord can propose, that, generally speaking, could be called an improper covenant; for he has a right to let his land upon any terms he may think fit to propose; & there are many covenants, not usual or common, that could not be objected to. But there are many covenants, though proper, that do not naturally flow out of the contract. The contract, locatio & conductio, does not naturally lead to many covenants, that have now found their way into most leases; & cannot be said to be improper in many of them. But that cannot be the sense with reference to the insertion of this covenant upon the expression in this agreement. It cannot mean those covenants which would not be unreasonable. It must mean such as are calculated to secure the full effect of the contract (GRANT, M.R.).—JONES v. JONES (1803), 12 Ves. 186; 33 E. R. 71.

2496. — Under an agreement for a lease the lessor is not, without express stipulation, entitled to a covenant restraining alienation without licences as a proper & usual covenant.

I should have said that the meaning of the parties to a contract for a lease was that there should be proper covenants; & that the law implies what they are; as connected with the character & title of the lessor: covenants in this sense incidental; as regulating the obligations expressed & implied; not in contradiction to the quantity of interest, which the demise itself without special words was by the agreement to give to the lessee (LORD ELDON, C.).—CHURCH v. BROWN (1808), 15 Ves. 258; 33 E. R. 752, L. C.

2497. ———.]—In case of an agreement for a lease, with a stipulation that the lessee should keep the premises in repair, a right of entry was uniformly reserved to the landlord as a right incidental to the interest reserved to him by the agreement. Covenants became usual & proper covenants only because, by common consent, they are found essential to perfect the contract between the parties (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—BLAKESLEY v. WHIELDON (1841), 1 Hare, 176; 11 L. J. Ch. 164; 6 Jur. 54; 66 E. R. 996.

2498. ——— Question for jury.]—A party contracted for an assignment of a lease of a public-house, which was described as holden at a certain net rent, upon usual & common covenants. The lease contained a covenant by the tenant to pay land tax, sewers rate, & all other taxes, & a proviso for re-entry, if any business but that of a victualler should be carried on in the house, & it was proved that a considerable majority of public-house leases contained such a proviso:—Held: the covenant to pay land tax, etc., was a common covenant in a lease, reserving a net rent; & the proviso for re-entry must, with reference to a lease of a public-house, also be considered usual & common.

What are usual covenants is a question of fact for the jury, & not a question of construction for the ct. The phrase "usual covenants" in an agreement touching a lease, may be explained by reference to the nature of the premises, & the general practice with regard to leases of premises of that description.

The words "usual covenants" do not mean covenants universally inserted. That which is found in sixty leases out of a hundred is a usual covenant.

The clause of re-entry is to be found in six leases out of ten; & is a beneficial proviso with reference to property of this description.—BENNETT v. WOMACK (1828), 7 B. & C. 627; 3 C. & P. 96; 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 644; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 175; 108 E. R. 856.

2499. ——— Reference to nature of premises.]—BENNETT v. WOMACK, No. 2498, ante.

2500. ———.]—Plff. in replevin having taken & entered on a farm at a specified rent, & consented that an agreement should be prepared with the usual covenants, but no such agreement was prepared:—Held: although the words "usual covenants" might be construed in the popular sense as "usual terms," they did not apply to the periods of payment of rent, but referred to agricultural covenants, & evidence could not be given on the part of the landlord, of the usual terms or covenants in the same part of the country as to payment of rent, in order to show that it was payable quarterly, so as to justify a distress for rent, & on the same ground the lease of a former tenant of the same farm was not admissible in evidence.—HEYNES v. BROWN (1853), 21 L. T. O. S. 24.

2501. ——— Reference to previous leases by lessor.]—The words "usual covenants" used in an executory lease in a will may receive a construction from the circumstance in reference to which they are applied at variance with their ordinary meaning.

What is meant by "usual covenants" is, in my opinion, the covenants contained in the leases already granted by the testator; that is the ordinary meaning of the words, & when he says the "usual covenants" be meant the covenants he usually gave (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—HONYWOOD v. HONYWOOD (1868), 18 L. T. 316.

Usual covenants may vary in different generations. The law declares what are usual covenants according to the then knowledge of mankind. What is well known at one time may not be well known at another time, so that you cannot say that usual covenants never change (JESSEL, M.R.).—HAMPSHIRE v. WICKENS (1878), 7 Ch. D. 555; 47 L. J. Afterwards deft. refused to grant a lease unless it contained a clause against underletting. In an action to enforce specific performance of the agreement:—Held: the clause was not a “proper clause”; deft. was bound to grant a lease without putting in any such clause; & specific performance decreed.—MADIE v. ADDISON (1882), 52 L. J. Ch. 80; 47 L. T. 543; 31 W. R. 320.

2516. —.—.]—A purchaser objected to complete the purchase of a term in leasehold premises upon the ground that the lease contained a covenant which had not been disclosed to him, that the lessee was not to assign or part with possession of the premises without the consent of the lessor, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld:—Held: this was not a “usual covenant,” & the purchaser was entitled to repudiate his contract.—BISHOP v. TAYLOR & Co. (1891), 60 L. J. Q. B. 556; 64 L. T. 529; 55 J. P. 695; 39 W. R. 542; 7 T. L. R. 419, D. C.

2518. —.—.]—An agreement for a lease of a house & land contained a provision that the lease should contain all covenants & conditions usually inserted in leases of such nature, & further provided that the term “lessee” should include heirs, exors., administrators, or assigns, but there was no express agreement that it should contain a covenant on the part of the lessee not to assign either with or without the lessor's consent. There was a provision that the lessor should “not withhold except for exceptionally strong & good reasons” his consent to an assignment or sublease:—Held: a provision that the lease should contain a covenant by the lessee not to assign or sub-demise his interest without the consent of the lessor first had & obtained could not be introduced into the agreement by implication.—DE SOYSA v. DE PLESS POL, [1912] A. C. 194; 81 L. J. P. C. 126; 105 L. T. 642, P. C.

2519. —.—.]—Agricultural lease.—A. granted B. a lease containing a covenant against assignment. A. afterwards agreed to cancel the lease, & to grant B. a much more beneficial one, “as a reward for the great improvement he had made in the estate, & as an encouragement for his general industry.” A. died before executing the second lease, & B. filed a bill for specific performance against his representatives. A compromise was effected for granting a lease for a reduced term, “the lease to contain all covenants usual & ordinary in farming leases.” It was insisted by the tenant that under the compromise, there should be no restriction against assignment:—Held: the master, in settling the lease, was to have regard to the original lease & to the custom as to farming leases, if any.—BELL v. BARCHARD (1852), 16 Beav. 8; 21 L. J. Ch. 411; 51 E. R. 678.

2520. —.—.]—Covenant coupled with proviso for re-entry.—In 1852, deft. was entitled to the residue of a term of years of some lands of which pltfs. were seised in fee. After much negotiation drawing up of agreements, & alterations & modifications of these agreements, deft. signed in Apr. 1854, an agreement to surrender his existing interest, & to take a new lease, by which he was to covenant to build a large number of houses, & to lay out the premises & roads, & to build drains in the manner therein stated. He agreed further to covenant not to underlet or assign the premises without permission from pltfs., & in case of any breach of any of these covenants pltfs. were to be at liberty to re-enter on the whole of the premises. Ultimately, however, deft. demanded that the clause against underletting should be omitted in preparing the lease, & on pltfs. declining to accede to this demand, deft. refused to complete his contract on the ground of surprise & undue influence over him. Pltfs. then instituted this suit, praying by their bill a specific performance of the agreement. The judge made a decree in their favour from which deft. appealed:—Held: there existed no reason whatever for releasing deft. from the contract into which he had thus entered.—HABERDASHERS' CO. v. ISAAC (1857), 29 L. T. O. S. 350; 5 W. R. 855, L. J. J.; affy., 3 Jur. N. S. 611.

The lease as prepared & settled by the conveyancing counsel contained a proviso for re-entry, not only for non-payment of the rent but also for the breach of any of the clauses, covenants, conditions, & assignments in the lease:—Held: the proviso for re-entry ought only to be made to extend to the non-payment of rent. PART XI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 6.

r. General rule.]—In a building lease a covenant that the landlord may re-enter is a usual covenant.—STANTON v. CLAPP (1852), 3 Nfld. L. R. 292.—NFLD.

SHARP v. MILLIGAN (1857), 23 Beav. 419; 53 E. R. 165; sub nom. THORPE v. MILLIGAN, 5 W. R. 336.

2532. ————.]—A., who was under an agreement to take the lease of a house, the lease to contain all "usual covenants" agreed to assign all his interest to B., & forwarded him a copy of the agreement for a lease. In answer to inquiries by B., A. stated that the lessee would not have to do substantial repairs. Upon bill by A. for specific performance:—Held: B. was bound to repair the house in the event of damage by fire.—KENDALL v. HILL (1860), 2 L. T. 717; 6 Jur. N. S. 968.

2533. ———— Or other casualty.]—In a draft lease, prepared in pursuance of an open contract, the lessor inserted the usual general covenant by the lessee to repair & leave in repair, damage by fire only excepted. The lessee required that the words "or other casualty" should be added to the exception:—Held: the proposed words were so ambiguous that they ought not to be inserted.—CROSSE v. MORGAN (1889), 60 L. T. 703; 37 W. R. 543.

2534. Rebuild—Destruction by fire or tempest—Covenant by lessor.]—Under a power to a tenant for life to lease for years, reserving the usual covenants, etc. a lease made by him, containing a proviso, that in case the premises were blown down or burned, the lessor should rebuild, otherwise the rent should cease, is void; the jury finding that such covenant is unusual.—DOE d. ELLIS & MEDWIN v. SANDHAM (1787), 1 Term Rep. 705; 99 E. R. 1332.

Annotations:—Refd. Hare v. Groves (1796), 3 Anst. 687. Mentd. MacLae v. Sutherland (1854), 3 E. & B. 1.

SUB-SECT. 9.—OTHER COVENANTS.

2535. Covenant to make quantity of malt—Lease of malthouse.]—Specific performance refused of a written agreement for a lease, because it was proved by parol evidence, that one of the terms of the actual agreement, viz., that pltf. should make on the premises, which included a malthouse, five hundred coombs of malt annually, was not inserted in the written agreement. The insertion of such a covenant in a lease of a malthouse, cannot be insisted on without an express agreement, it not being an usual covenant.—GARRARD v. GRINLING (1818), 1 Wils. Ch. 460; 2 Swan. 244; 37 E. R. 196.

2536. Affirmative covenant to carry on particular trade—Lease with liberty to carry on such trade.]—A. agreed to let, & B. to take a piece of land, with liberty to build thereon such warehouses, glass-houses, kilns, houses for workmen, & other erections necessary for carrying on the business of a glass manufactory, as he should think fit, for sixty-one years, at a certain rent; & B. agreed to pay the rent, to build in a substantial manner, & not to use the premises for any other purpose than a glass manufactory during the term. A lease & counterpart to be executed in conformity with the agreement, in which should be inserted all usual covenants:—Held: this agreement did not warrant the insertion in the lease of an affirmative covenant by the lessee, that he would carry on the business of a glass manufactory on the demised premises during the term.—DOE d. BUTE (MARQUIS) v. GUEST (1846), 15 M. & W. 160; 153 E. R. 804.

2537. Registration of assignment of lease—With head lessor—Payment of fee.]—BROOKES v. DRYSDALE, No. 2405, ante.

SECT. 3.—EXPRESS COVENANTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

2538. Erection of building—Interference by covenantee.]—BARKER v. FLETWEL (1586), Godb. 69; 78 E. R. 43.

2539. ————.]—Pltf., lessee of a farm, covenanted with deft., his lessor, to fetch & bring all such materials as should at any time during the continuance of the term be wanted in erecting a thrashing mill; which mill deft. covenanted with pltf. to erect during the continuance of the term, for the use of the lessee & the occupiers of an adjoining farm. Deft. pleaded, first, that within a reasonable time from the date of the indenture, & during the continuance of the term, he began to provide the necessary materials for erecting the mill, & whilst he was so doing, pltf. desired him not to erect the same, but to refrain from so doing until he should be requested by pltf.; & lastly, a plea of leave & licence during the term:—Held: on special demurrer, both these pleas were bad.—CORDWENT v. HUNT (1818), 8 Taunt. 596; 2 Moore, C. P. 660; 129 E. R. 516.

2540. Subject to superintendence—Covenant to build absolute.]—A lease contained a covenant by the lessor to do certain work, & at the end of the covenant were these words: " & the whole of which is agreed to be left to the superintendence of deft. & pltf.'s son ":—Held: this was neither a condition precedent to, nor concurrent with, the covenant.—JONES v. CANNOCK (1852), 3 H. L. Cas. 700; 10 E. R. 278, H. L.

Annotations:—Consd. Neale v. Ratcliff (1850), 15 Q. B. 916. Refd. G. N. Ry. v. Harrison (1852), 12 C. B. 576; Westcott v. Hahn, [1917] 1 K. B. 605.

2542. Grant of new lease on surrender of old—Fine levied before grant.]—Debt on bond for performance of a covenant by lessor, that if the lessee surrender at any time during the term, he will grant him a new lease. The lessor accepts a fine of the premises. This is a breach of the condition & the lessee need not show that he offered to surrender.—MAYNIE v. SCOT (1596), Cro. Eliz. 479;

PART XI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.

t. Erection of building—Proviso for payment for improvements construed as covenant.]—A lessee covenanted to build on the demised premises during the term, "provided always, & it is the true intent & meaning of these presents, & the parties therunto, that at the expiration of the demise the buildings erected shall be paid for at the valuation of two indifferent persons," etc.:—Held: a covenant to pay.—McFATRIDGE v. TALBERT (1845), 2 U. C. R. 156.—CAN.

a. ———— Suitable for purposes required

—Liability of assignees of lessor.]—Notwithstanding the general rule that there is no implied covenant by a lessor of an existing building that it is fit for the purpose for which it was known to be intended to be used:—Held: deft. lessors were bound by their agreement to erect a building for their lessees, & to make that building suitable for the purposes for which the lessees required it; & deft. assignees of the lessors had assumed the liability of remedying the defects complained of in consideration of the tenants' relinquishment of their possible right of rescission.—TARRABAIN v. FERRING,

c. Covenant to furnish—A continuing covenant.]—ROSSIN v. JOSLIN (1859), 7 Gr. 198.—CAN.

d. Independent covenants—Effect of.]—By an agreement for lease the parties agreed that the lessee should have the right during the first year of erecting a windmill on the demised land. The lessor also agreed to fence the demised land within six months from the commencement of the term:

2543. 2545. Covenant to pull down building—Right of way for lessor—Not reserved in demise.]—If there is a covenant in a lease, that a lessee shall pull down part of a building for the lessor to make a way across the ground where such building stood, pltf., in an action for breach of such covenant, can only recover nominal damages, unless he has reserved a right to use such way.—GOOD v. HILL (1798), 2 Esp. 689, N. P.

2546. Covenant for joint use of pump with landlord—Joint liability to repair—Removal by landlord.]—The lessor, after a demise of certain premises with a portion of an adjoining yard, covenanted that the lessee should have "the use of the pump in the yard jointly with himself, whilst the same should remain there, paying half the expenses of repair." The words whilst, etc., reserve to the lessor a power of removing the pump at his pleasure; & it is no breach of the covenant though he remove it without reasonable cause, & in order to injure the lessee. But without those words it would have been a breach of covenant to have removed the pump.—RHODES v. BULLARD (1806), 7 East, 116; 3 Smith, K. B. 173; 103 E. R. 44.

2547. Supply of lime—Implied obligation to burn lime.]—Where a lessee covenanted that he would at all times & seasons of burning lime supply the lessor & his tenants with lime at a stipulated price for the improvement of their lands & repair of their houses:—Held: this was an implied covenant also that he would burn lime at all such seasons, & it was not a good defence to plead that there was no lime burned on the premises out of which the lessor could be supplied.—SHREWSBURY (EARL) v. GOULD (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 487; 106 E. R. 444.

Annotation:—Refd. Gwillim v. Daniell (1835), 2 Cr. M. & R. 61.

—Held: the covenants were independent, & the breach by the lessor of the covenant to fence, did not operate as an extension of the time, for the erection of the mill by the lessee.—ROBERTS v. GHULAM LABIE (1911), 13 W. A. L. R. 156.—AUS.

g. Covenant to repurchase.]—Where A. purchased a lease from B., & B. covenanted to repurchase it in three years for more than he paid, & after the three years A. tendered an assignment of the lease, which B. refused:—Held: A. was entitled to recover as the amount of damages the price agreed upon by B. for the repurchase.—GIBSON v. CUBITT (1838), 1 Ont. Dig. 1559.—CAN.

h. Covenant to appoint appraiser to value improvements.]—ANSLEY v. PETERS (1847), 3 Kerr. 543.—CAN.

k. Covenant to make improvements.]—A lease contained a covenant to the effect that it should be "competent" for the lessee to remove the then front window sashes, etc., & to put the best plate glass windows in the room of those removed, etc.:—Held: notwithstanding the introduction of the word "competent," the lessee covenanted to do the work specified.—MCDONALD v. COCHRANE (1856), 6 C. P. 134.—CAN.

2550. Enforcement by underlessor of covenants against lessor—Underlessee empowered to sue in name of underlessor.]—A railway co. leased to Messrs. R. certain refreshment rooms, with a covenant (inter alia) that certain trains should stop there for certain times. Messrs. R. demised the premises in question to G. That lease, after reciting the deed by which the premises were demised to Messrs. R. contained a covenant that Messrs. R. would, during the continuance of the term, do all such acts & things as should be necessary & proper for enforcing the fulfilment & performance of the covenants thereinbefore recited, for giving G. the full benefit & advantage of the refreshment rooms thereby demised, as fully as if G. were the assignee of the covenants; & that it should be lawful for G., in the name of Messrs. R., to bring, commence, or prosecute any action, suit, or other proceeding whatsoever, for enforcing the fulfilment & performance of the covenants & agreements in the recited indenture of lease, on the part of the co. or for or any of them, G. indemnifying Messrs. R. from & against all costs, charges, & expenses to be incurred, or defrayed in or about any such action, suit, or other proceeding as aforesaid. G. entered upon the demised premises; but by order of the co., certain express trains passed the station where the premises in question were, without stopping; in consequence of which G. sustained a loss. Of this breach of covenant Messrs. R. had due notice, & were thereupon requested by G. to file, in their own name, & at their own risk & costs, a bill in Chancery, to restrain the co. by injunction from directing or permitting, except in particular cases, express trains from passing the refreshment rooms without stopping for the prescribed time:—Held: assuming the filing such bill to be a necessary & proper act, Messrs. R. were bound to file such bill, & that the latter stipulation, empowering G. to sue in the names of Messrs. R. did not limit or qualify the general covenant, & therefore they were liable in an action of covenant for not filing such bill.—RIGBY v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1849), 4 Exch. 220; 18 L. J. Ex. 404; 14 L. T. O. S. 42; 14 Jur. 710; 154 E. R. 191.

2551. Construction of roads on building estate—Sufficiency of performance.]—MASON v. COLE, No. 2345, ante.

2552. No communication between points over demised land—Means of communication provided—No user.]—On a covenant by lessee that there shall be no communication or way across the demised land to a certain other place. Qu.: whether the mere opening of doors in a wall is a the lessee of a certain farm, against deft., the lessor, for breach of the covenant contained in the lease, to dig ditches, etc.:—Held: the measure of damages was the difference between the rentable value of the demised premises with the improvements made, & the value without such improvements.—MCLEWEN v. DILLON (1886), 12 O. R. 411.—CAN.

m. Covenant to return oats—On termination of lease—Action brought before termination.]—Action to recover the value of seed oats supplied by pltf. to deft., pursuant to the terms of a lease:—Held: as the lease had not been terminated until some time after action brought, there had been no breach committed by deft. of the breach, without any user of the communication; but a user across the demised land may be a breach, even although the doors have been opened by a third party. Qu.: whether the opening of the doors would be a breach of a covenant to uphold & maintain all buildings & erections on the demised premises, but the covenant would not apply to a wall not on the demised premises, nor to any fence not permanent.—BORGIS v. EDWARDS (1860), 2 F. & F. 111.

2553. Purchase of material from lessor—Cessation of work for which required.—Pltf. agreed to let, & defts. to take, for one year, at a stipulated rent, certain work & buildings; & pltf. agreed to supply to defts. the whole of the chlorine still-waste as it came from their stills, neither adding to nor taking anything from the same, at the rate of 2s. 6d. for every 21 cwt. of waste so supplied, with the understanding that defts. were to have the option of a lease of the premises for seven or fourteen years at the same rent, if they should feel disposed so to do, within three months from the date thereof. Pltf. agreed not to use or injure or part with any of the still-waste except to defts., so long as they should hold the works:—Held: defts. were bound to accept & pay for the whole of pltf.'s chlorine still-waste during the year or such further term as they should hold the works, & it was no answer to an action for not accepting it, that defts.' manufacture failed & was discontinued, & the chlorine still-waste proved useless, & was no longer necessary for their manufacture.—BEALEY v. STUART (1862), 7 H. & N. 753; 31 L. J. Ex. 281; 8 Jur. N. S. 389; 158 E. R. 672.

2554. Clay to be worked for sale—Sale unremunerative.—A covenant in a lease binding the lessee to "get the demised clay to the fullest practicable extent consistent with the means of sale of bricks & tiles to be made therefrom," does not bind the lessee to go on working at a loss, even though a means of sale, at an unremunerative rate, may have been found for bricks made out of the demised clay.—NEWTON v. NOCK (1880), 43 L. T. 197.

2555. No objection to be taken to works—On adjoining premises—Express demise of lights—Obstruction of lights.—Under a lease, dated Sept. 20, 1894, W. became the lessee of certain premises for a term expiring in 1932. By a deed dated Aug. 3, 1899, W. demised the premises to H. for a term of twenty-one years, "together with all . . . lights, easements, . . . & appurtenances to the premises belonging." The deed contained a covenant by the lessee that he would not "object to any works to adjoining premises" that might be sanctioned by or on behalf of the lessor or the superior landlords or landlord. The lease also contained a covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment of the premises. A co. had acquired an interest in certain property adjoining to the demised premises & forming part of the same estate, & were proposing to erect thereon some buildings which, as H. alleged, would obstruct the access of light hitherto enjoyed by his premises. He accordingly brought an action to restrain the co. from building so as to obstruct his light. The proposed buildings had been approved by the surveyor of the estate. In these circumstances, W., who was interested in the co., brought an action against H. to restrain him from objecting to the buildings then being erected by the co., on the ground that his action constituted a breach of the covenant; & he then moved for a stay of proceedings in H.'s action:—Held: the words "adjoining premises" did not extend to any buildings which were situated near enough to affect materially the demised premises by obstructing easements, but only to buildings which came into physical contact with the demised building: "adjoining" meant adjoining in the sense in which it was used in London Building Act, 1894 (c. cxxiii), & could not be used in the sense of "neighbouring"; & therefore H. was not precluded on that ground from objecting to the erection of the buildings.—WHITE v. HARROW, HARROW v. MARYLEBONE DISTRICT PROPERTY CO., LTD. (1902), 86 L. T. 4; 50 W. R. 259; 18 T. L. R. 228; 46 Sol. Jo. 196, C. A.

o. Covenant to make open space round houses—Continuing obligation to keep open.—The owner of the manor of B. demised lands, part of the manor, for a long term, with a covenant to build houses thereon, & to make an area round such houses. The houses were built & an area made, according to the terms of the lease. The lessee subsequently subdemised one of the houses, by an instrument which did not recite, nor refer to, the original lease, nor contain any covenant respecting the area, but did contain a covenant to do suit & service to cts. of the manor of B. The sub-lessee, more than twenty years before the commencement of the suit, built over a portion of the area, & subsequently assigned his sub-lessee to the resp.:—Held: that the covenant to make an area imposed a continuing obligation to keep the area open.

That the covenant to do service in the Manor Ct. was sufficient to have put the sub-lessee & his assignee on inquiry, & that the assignee was bound to carry out the terms of the original lease.

That, upon the portion covered in before his assignment, he was entitled to erect a porch.—HERBERT v. MACLEAN (1860), 12 I. Ch. R. 84.—IR.

The diversity is this. If the disturbance had been in the chamber, it is plain then no action of covenant would have lain, because it was excepted & so not demised: aliter, where the lessee agrees to let the lessor have a thing out of the demised premises, as a way common or other profit à prendre; in such case covenant lies for the disturbance & this covenant goes with the tenement & binds the assignee (per Cur.).—COLE'S CASE (1692), 1 Salk. 196; 91 E. 2565. Whether controlled by covenant for title—& covenant for further assurance.]—The assignor of a lease, covenanted that for & notwithstanding any act or thing by him done, the lease was valid; & further, that it should be lawful for the assignee at all times during the term, quietly to enjoy, without the lawful let or interruption of the assignor, his exors., administrators, or assigns, or any of them, or any other person or persons whomsoever, claiming any estate or right in the premises, & that, clearly discharged by the assignor, his heirs, exors., or administrators, from all former incumbrances made or suffered by him, or by their or either of their acts of privity; then followed a covenant for further assurance by the assignor, his exors. & administrators, & all persons whomsoever, claiming under him:—Held: the general words in the covenant for quiet enjoyment were restrained by the restrictive words in the covenants for title & further assurance, which preceded & followed it, & therefore that such covenant was confined to the acts of the covenantor & those claiming under him.—NIND v. Covenant in agreement for lease—Title of lessor defective—Whether lessee entitled to full covenant.—Under a contract in writing for a lease of land, containing no words showing an intention to exclude the under surface & mines, which did not in fact belong to the intended lessor, but containing an agreement for an absolute covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held: the lessee was entitled to a lease according to the contract, with an unqualified covenant for quiet enjoyment.—*ONIONS v. 2568. — Lunacy of lessor before lease granted—Vesting order.—Pltf. had entered into a building agreement with deft. under which deft. was to grant leases to pltf. in the form of a draft lease, which contained an express covenant for quiet enjoyment. Before the leases were granted deft. became of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition:—Held: an order under Trustee Act, 1850 (c. 60), might be made vesting the legal term in pltf. pursuant to the contract, but such order would not give him the benefit of the covenant for quiet enjoyment by deft.—COWPER v. HARMER (1887), 57 L. J. Ch. 460; 57 L. T. 714; 4 T. L. R. 16.

2569. Covenant does not enlarge grant—Rights confined to terms of demise—Access of light & air.—Pltf. took a lease for ninety-nine years, containing the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment, of a piece of ground upon which a house had been built for him by his lessor. A garden was attached to the house, having a wall round it seven feet high. Pltf.'s lessor subsequently let the adjoining land to deft., who erected thereon a mews, having a wall twenty-three feet high, running the whole length of pltf.'s garden. Pltf. filed a bill to restrain the erection of deft.'s wall, on the ground that it interfered with the free access of light & air to, & the enjoyment of, his garden:—Held: there was no contract, express or implied, in the covenant for quiet enjoyment or otherwise in the lease that the enjoyment of the garden as a garden should not be interfered with, & in the absence of such contract, interference with the access of light & air to the garden was not a ground for the interposition of the Court.

This is a covenant which relates solely to the land demised—it has no relation to any other land whatever. It professes to be a covenant for the quiet enjoyment of the land “hereby demised,” & nothing else; & all the contract is that the lessee shall enjoy the land hereby demised without any interruption by the lessor his heirs or assigns. In fact, a covenant for quiet enjoyment is nothing more than would have been implied from the terms of the demise (MALINS, V.-C.).—POTTS v. SMITH (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 311; 38 L. J. Ch. 58; 18 L. T. 629; 33 J. P. 52; 16 W. R. 891.

2570. — — — — —.]—There is no difference in the right of an owner of land to the ordinary easement of light, whether it is acquired by twenty years' user or by grant from the owner of the servient tenement; & if the grant is accompanied by a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the premises, such covenant does not enlarge the right of the covenantee so as to entitle him to an injunction in equity to restrain an obstruction where the damage is not sufficient to enable him to maintain an action at law. But it is otherwise where the right to light claimed is not the ordinary easement, but a special right created by the covenant; in which case a ct. of equity will grant an injunction without regard to the amount of damage.—*LEECH v. Deft. covenanted for quiet enjoyment, & that if, at any time during the term, any of the tenants of deft. of any such lands, plantations, coverts, etc., should obstruct pltf. in the enjoyment of the licence, or should destroy the game, rabbits, etc., then deft. would upon the requisition of pltf., give notice to quit to such tenants, & enforce the notice by such legal measures as should be necessary. Breach that, after the demise to pltf., deft. demised to R. for the term of twelve years one hundred acres of the plantations on which the exclusive right of killing rabbits had been granted to pltf., without any clause in the demise to prevent R. from obstructing pltf. in the enjoyment of the licence, or from destroying rabbits, & without reserving to deft. the power of giving R. notice to quit, or of enforcing such notice by such legal measures as should be necessary, the plantations not being at the time of the demise to pltf. parcel of any farm; & that R. did afterwards kill & destroy divers rabbits:—Held: the declaration was bad, as not containing any breach, the demise to R. not constituting any breach of deft.'s covenant.—*NEWTON v. Therefore, where a lessor has let premises to be used for a particular business—e.g. storing paper—he would be guilty of a breach of such a covenant if he or persons lawfully claiming under him were afterwards to do anything which would render these premises unfit for storing paper generally; but would not, in the absence of express stipulation, be guilty if the act done, being harmless in itself, were nevertheless detrimental to the storing of some particular class of paper.

We have here an agreement for a lease with nothing in it to show that goods requiring any particular protection were to be kept on the premises. *Bandy v. 2574. ——— Property acquired since lease.]—In 1897 a lease of offices for a term of fourteen years was granted to pltf. by the then owner of the freehold. The lease contained the ordinary covenant by the lessor for himself, his exors., administrators & assigns, for the quiet enjoyment of the demised premises by the lessee. In 1898 the lessor conveyed the reversion, subject to the lease, to defts. In 1900 defts. purchased from a stranger a house adjoining the demised premises, pulled it down, & erected on the site a new building of such a height that it caused one of pltf.'s chimneys to smoke so as to affect materially his enjoyment of one room:—Held: defts. were not liable for a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, inasmuch as at the date of the demise the lessor had no interest in the adjoining premises, & could not & did not for the benefit of the lessee put any fetter on their enjoyment, but undertook to respect rights of the lessee which were limited by the fact that the owner of the adjoining land might, if he were so minded, build on it so as to interfere with the draught of the lessee's chimneys.

The ordinary covenant for quiet enjoyment does not enlarge the grant. So far as the covenant is personal or collateral it does not run with the land.

B. Exclusion of Implied Covenant.

2576. General rule.]—In a conveyance in fee of land to deft. he covenanted with the grantor not to permit any part of the premises to be used for selling beer. Deft. afterwards granted a lease of part of the land, with covenants by the lessee not to carry on certain trades, but not mentioning that of a seller of beer, & with the usual covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment. The term was assigned to pltf., who having no notice of deft.'s restrictive covenant used the premises as a beer-shop, & being restrained by injunction in Chancery, at the suit of the vendor of the fee, sued deft. for breach of the express covenant, for quiet enjoyment, & also for breach of a covenant for title alleged to be implied from the terms of the lease:—Held: the covenant for quiet enjoyment excluded any implication of such an implied covenant, & there had been no breach of the former covenant, as it did not guarantee to the tenant that he might lawfully use the land for any purpose not included in the restrictions in the lease.

The covenant for quiet enjoyment whether with or without a partially restrictive covenant has therefore been regarded as a covenant to secure title & possession, & not to guarantee to the tenant that he may lawfully use the land for any purpose not in the restriction. To give it a wider effect might involve some strange consequences. If a seller or lessor had worked out the mines, & the purchaser or lessee were to build a house, which sunk into the old workings, here would be a breach at once. In other words a warranty would be read in that the land was capable of being used for any purpose, or for any purpose not expressly excluded (WILLES, J.).—DENNETT v. ATHERTON (1872), 1 L. R. 7 Q. If there is an express covenant either for title or for quiet enjoyment then there is no implied covenant at all.

The case of Hart v. Windsor, No. 2613, post, is an authority that the word "let" has the same effect in this respect as the word "demise," & that any other equivalent word would have the same effect. 2590. —.]—A lease contained a covenant by the lessors for quiet enjoyment by the lessee in the usual terms, viz., that the lessee paying his rent & performing his covenants should quietly enjoy the premises without interruption from the lessors or any one claiming under them. There were also covenants by the lessee to pay rent & keep the premises in repair. The rent being in arrear & the premises out of repair, the lessors caused notices to be served on the lessee's sub-tenants requiring them not to pay rent to the lessee but to themselves, & threatening legal proceedings in default of compliance with the notice. The lessors though requested to withdraw the notice by the lessee refused to do so for a period of several weeks, & in the meantime, in consequence of the notice, one of the lessee's sub-tenants paid rent to the lessors:—Held: there was evidence of a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, & that covenant & the covenants by the lessee to pay rent & repair being independent covenants, an action was maintainable by the lessee.

It was contended that the covenant for quiet enjoyment & the covenants to be performed by plff. were not to be read independently, but as dependent covenants, & that the payment of rent & repairing were therefore conditions precedent. 2613. —. —.]—There is no implied warranty attached by law to a demise of land or premises, that they are fit for any particular purpose. Semble: in an agreement for a ready furnished house for immediate habitation, it is otherwise.

Considering this case without reference to the modern authorities, which are said to be at variance, it is clear that from the word "demise," in a lease under seal, the law implies a covenant, in a lease not under seal, a contract, for title to the estate merely, that is, for quiet enjoyment against the lessor & all that come in under him by title, & against others claiming by title paramount during the term; & the word "let," or any equivalent words, which constitute a lease, have, no doubt, the same effect, but not more. There is no authority for saying that these words imply a contract for any particular state of the property at the time of the demise; & there are many, which clearly show that there is no implied contract that the property shall continue fit for the purpose for which it is demised (PARKE, B.).—HART v. 2621. —.]—In 1895 P., owner in fee of S. Hall, joined with other landowners in making a binding agreement for a lease of a coal seam under their land with a trustee for a co. afterwards formed. To the agreement was scheduled a draft lease which gave no express power to let down the surface, but had a clause enabling the co., if anticipating damage from subsidence, to leave coal for support without paying for it, & another providing that all clauses usual in leases in the district should be inserted. P. died leaving S. Hall to his widow & two other persons in trust for his widow for life, & in 1901 they joined the other landowners in demising the seam to trustees upon trust to make a lease to the co. in a form already prepared, such lease being immediately afterwards executed. It contained express power to let down the surface, & it made the lessors' consent necessary to the leaving of coal for support by the co. without payment. In 1904 the widow by an instrument not under seal, & containing no express covenant for quiet enjoyment agreed "to let" S. Hall to pltf. on a yearly tenancy. The co., anticipating damage by subsidence, applied for consent to the leaving without payment of a pillar to support S. Hall, but through the widow's influence it was withheld. The co. continued to work, & damage to pltf. ensued:—Held: (1) a contract for quiet enjoyment was to be implied by the widow letting to pltf.; (2) the widow could not claim indemnity from the co. under a covenant in their lease without joining the trustees with whom it was made.

2627. Underlease—Determination of interest of underlessor.—A., in 1841, agreed to let to B. premises, "subject to the same conditions as were mentioned in an agreement to A. from F.," at a certain yearly rent, for the term of eight years & a quarter, & that if F. was willing to accept B. as tenant instead of A., B. was willing to take the remainder of the lease or memorandum from F., & become his tenant. F. was tenant to D., & F.'s term expired in 1844, whereupon F. brought an action of ejectment against B., & recovered possession. In an action by B., on this agreement, alleging after mutual promises that deft. promised "that B. should & might quietly use, occupy, possess, & enjoy the said premises during the said term for which A. had so agreed to let them":—Held: (1) this claim was not made out, as the law would not imply from an agreement to let subject to conditions, in the absence of showing what they were, an absolute contract for quiet enjoyment, & it was not incumbent on deft. to show what they were; (2) at all events, the implied contract for quiet enjoyment, if indeed it could at all be implied from a mere agreement to let, was confined to the interest of A.; & in order to enable B. to recover, he ought to show the continuance of A.'s interest.—*MESSENT v. In an agreement by which A. agrees to let & P. to take premises for a year certain, & thence from year to year, & A. agrees, when required by P., to grant a lease for the remainder which shall then be unexpired of the term & interest of him A., wanting ten days, the implied promise for quiet enjoyment is limited to the duration of A.'s interest; & P. can maintain no action against A. for damages consequent on A.'s reversioner intervening after the commencement of the tenancy from year to year.—PENFOLD v. ABBOTT (1862), 32 L. J. Q. B. 67; 7 L. T. 384; 27 J. P. 341; 9 Jur. N. S. 517; 11 W. R. 169.

A., who held certain premises by lease, let the premises to B. as tenant from year to year, there being no express covenant for quiet enjoyment. A.'s lease having expired, B. was evicted by the superior landlord in the middle of one of the years of tenancy:—Held: B. had no right of action against A. for damages for such eviction.—*SCHWARTZ v. The underlessee was not informed of this clause & underlet to a tenant, who incurred a forfeiture by using the premises for a shop; & the original lessor evicted him:—Held: this was not an eviction by means of the lessor within the meaning of the covenant in the underlease.—*SPENCER v. condition for re-entry upon breach of any of the covenants in the lease. Deft. let the premises to pltf. for the remainder of the term, this lease containing a covenant by deft. for quiet enjoyment of the premises by pltf. without any interruption by deft. or any person lawfully claiming through him. Subsequently the original lessor assigned the reversion, & the assignees of the reversion brought an action against deft. to recover possession of the premises as upon the breach of covenant against assignment. Deft. gave pltf. notice of the action, telling him that there was no defence, & signed a consent to judgment for possession, under which pltf. was evicted:—Held: as deft. had a good defence to the action, the breach of covenant having occurred before the assignment of the reversion, the act of deft. in consenting to judgment for possession was the cause of the interruption of pltf.'s enjoyment, & was therefore a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

E., or by his acts, means, consent, neglect, default, privity or procurement. 2650. — Omission of "lawfully" from covenant.—(1) The word "lawfully" is not in the covenant, but I do not think its omission is of any importance (BRAY, J.).

(2) It comes to this, that the lessor agrees to become bound for any act of interruption by himself or by any person whom he has expressly or impliedly authorised to do the acts. If the lessor parts with the property or with adjoining property to a person, & that person is in a position to rightfully claim under his title from the lessor that he is authorised to do those acts, the lessor will be responsible. This is reasonable & is what the parties might well have contemplated, because the lessor has really authorised the acts to be done; but to hold that the parties contemplated that the lessor was to be responsible for wrongful or negligent acts which he had not authorised would, in my judgment, be beyond reason (BRAY, J.).—WILLIAMS v. GABRIEL, [1906] 1 K. B. 155; 75 L. J. K. B. 149; 94 L. T. 17; 54 W. R. 379; 22 T. L. R. 217.

2651. Who are persons claiming under lessor—All persons expressly or impliedly authorised.—

(1) Deft. leased to the P. Mining co. a mine for the purpose of being worked as an iron mine; subsequently, he leased to pltf. an adjoining mine for the same purpose, the lease to pltf. containing a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the mine, "without any interruption or eviction by the lessor, his heirs or assigns, or any other person or persons claiming or to claim by, from, or under him." The P. co., while properly working their mine under the terms of their lease from the deft., struck a "feeder," with the result that a large body of underground water, the existence of which was unsuspected & the nature of which was uncertain, flooded their mine, & rising in the levels found its way through a natural fissure in the limestone rock into pltf.' mine, which was on a higher level, & caused considerable damage. Pltf. having brought an action to recover damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held: the interruption to the working of pltf.' mine by the irruption of water not having been caused by any direct act of interruption, or by any act the consequences of which either were foreseen or ought to have been foreseen by deft. at the time when the covenant was entered into, was not an interruption within the meaning of the covenant, & deft. was not liable.

(2) [A covenant for quiet enjoyment] has been construed to mean that the covenantee shall have quiet enjoyment of the thing demised, not interrupted by any act of the lessor, or of any person authorised by him: to that it has hitherto been confined. Therefore, in an action upon this covenant, pltf. does not prove his case by merely proving an interruption of his enjoyment; he must further prove that it has been interrupted by an act of deft., the covenantor, or by the act of some person authorised by him (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(3) The case of Sanderson v. Berwick on Tweed Corp., No. 2697, post, is a clear authority that the interruption contemplated by the covenant need not necessarily be an interference with the title, but may extend to an interference with the enjoyment (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—*HARRISON, AINSLIE & CO. v. 2658. — Prior appointee of lessor & another.]—B. covenanted with his lessee for quiet enjoyment as against any person "claiming by, from, or under" him. An eviction by a prior appointee of B. & C. is a breach of the covenant.—CALVERT v. SEBRIGHT (1852), 15 Beav. 156; 51 E. R. 496.

2659. — Claimant under settlement made by lessor under power.]—By a deed of settlement made by deft. in 1842, under a power contained in his father's will, a term of one thousand years in certain estates was limited to T. & W., in trust, by mtge., sale, or otherwise, to raise a sum not exceeding £10,000 for payment of deft.'s debts; & in 1843 the trustees assigned the term by way of mtge. to A. & B., deft. being a party to the deed, covenanting for payment of the principal & interest, & also for title in the trustees, & for quiet enjoyment by the mtgees. in case of default. This assignment contained a power to deft. to lease, by & with the consent & approbation of the mtgees., their heirs, etc. In 1846, deft., without having obtained the consent of the mtgees., granted a lease of part of the lands to pltf., with a covenant for quiet enjoyment during the term, "without the let, suit, trouble, denial, eviction, molestation, or disturbance of the lessor, his heirs or assigns, or any person or persons claiming or deriving, or to claim or derive, by, from, or under him, them, or any of them." Pltf. in 1851 received a notice from the surviving mtgee., informing him of the mtge., & that the principal & interest were unpaid & in arrear, & requiring pltf. to pay rent to him. Having consulted his attorney, & finding that he could not successfully resist the claim of the mtgee., pltf. consented to give up possession of the land to him, & the mtgee. entered & took possession, paying pltf. £75 as a compensation for certain improvements. Upon a case stated for the opinion of the ct.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to maintain an action upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment, the facts showing an eviction, or, at all events, a molestation & disturbance of pltf., by one claiming title by, from, or under deft.—CARPENTER v. PARKER (1857), 3 C. B. N. S. 206; 27 L. J. C. P. 78; 30 L. T. O. S. 166; 22 J. P. 7; 6 W. R. 98; 140 E. R. 718.

2662. — Lessee of minerals—Under demised property.]—In 1896, A. & B., the then trustees of the will of C., leased certain mineral rights to a colliery co. by a mineral lease giving the colliery co. power to work minerals. In 1903 A. & D., the trustees of the will of C., leased the surface over the said colliery on a ninety-nine years lease, with a messuage then in course of erection, & the lease contained a covenant for quiet enjoyment "without any lawful interruption from or by the lessors or any person rightfully claiming from or under them." The house was completed, & the lessee thereof alleged a subsidence, & a summons was issued to determine the liability of A. & D. or either of them on the assumption that the damage, if any, was caused by the proper working of the colliery:—Held: only A. was liable.—Re GRIFFITHS, GRIFFITHS v. RIGGS (1917), 61 Sol. Jo. 268.

2663. — Lessees of adjoining land.]—In 1911 the tenant for life of settled freehold estate in Cornwall granted a lease to pltf. of a small piece of land for twenty-one years at a rent of £7 for the express purpose of an explosives magazine, & he entered into a covenant with the tenant for quiet enjoyment, but no other express covenant. The lessor knew that the purpose for which the grant was made would involve the imposition of some restrictions. The lessee was aware of the nature of the restrictions imposed by a licence for the magazine under Explosives Act, 1875 (c. 17), & that if buildings were erected upon adjoining land of the lessor's within certain distances of the magazine the licence would be withdrawn; & both knew that there had been extensive working in the past of minerals in the immediate neighbourhood. In 1919 defts. obtained a lease from the freeholder of the same estate of adjoining land for the purpose of working the minerals, but in such a manner as not to interfere with the explosives magazine of pltf.'s or the rights of others, & subject thereto, to erect buildings for the purpose of working the minerals. Defts. reopened two shafts & erected three buildings or sheds within distances prohibited by pltf.'s licence under Explosives Act, 1875 (c. 17). In an action by pltf. to restrain defts. from allowing these buildings & works to remain, on the ground that the acts of defts. constituted a derogation of the lessor's grant:—Held: (1) under the circumstances in which the lease of 1911 was granted, there must be implied on the part of the lessor an obligation not to do anything which would violate the conditions under which the licence was held by pltf. & thereby cause, ipso facto, a forfeiture of the licence under the Explosives Act, 1875 (c. 17); the acts done by defts. would, if done by the lessor, have been in derogation of his grant; & inasmuch as defts. were for this purpose in the same position as the lessor, the acts must be regarded as done by him; (2) pltf. was entitled to the injunction he claimed, but its operation must be confined to the existing licence & would not extend to any future licence.—*HARMER v. In 1860, A. demised Upton Castle & about sixty acres of land adjoining it to C., & also, "the exclusive right of shooting & sporting over & taking the game, rabbits, & wild-fowl upon the premises & also upon the entire manor of Upton," including the two hundred & sixty acres under lease to B., reserving to the lessor "all trees, underwood, thorns, & bushes growing on the land, as well as all mines, minerals, & quarries," etc.; with a covenant for quiet enjoyment, without interruption by the lessor or any person or persons lawfully claiming by, from, or under him, etc. B., finding the rabbits too numerous, by means of ferrets & guns destroyed a large number of them; he also cut all the underwood on his farm, & grubbed up & destroyed the furze covers, & thereby materially interrupted & injured C.'s right of sporting:—Held: inasmuch as these acts on the part of B. were not warranted by the terms of the demise to him, they did not constitute a breach of A.'s covenant for quiet enjoyment in the lease of 1860.—*JEFFRIES v. 2690. Acts of commission & of omission.]—In 1870 the owner of land, which was covered with slag & through which ran a natural stream, inclosed the stream in a culvert. In 1886 he granted to certain persons a lease for ninety-nine years of part of the land with the building on it, retaining the adjoining part through which the culvert ran. The foundations of the south wall of the building did not reach the soil, but rested on the slag. The lease contained an express covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment. In 1924 the culvert was in a bad state of repair, with the result that the stream broke through the culvert & scoured away the foundations of the south wall, so that it collapsed. At that time the lease was vested in pltf., while the land under which the culvert ran & the reversion to the leased land, expectant on the determination of the lease, were vested in def.—Held: (1) confining the stream in an artificial structure incapable of retaining it was an act of def., which had interrupted or disturbed the lessee's quiet enjoyment of the land, & therefore pltf. was entitled to succeed on the ground of breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment; (2) the covenant was not confined to active disturbance of enjoyment, & the omission to keep the culvert in repair was an omission of a duty by the owner to the adjoining landowner, which if neglected might cause damage to the adjoining property, & the owner was therefore bound to prevent such damage by taking reasonable precautions.

iii. Substantial Interference with Enjoyment.

2696. General rule.]—(1) A person having only an interesse termini cannot maintain an action on a covenant for quiet enjoyment.

(2) The essence of a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment in a lease appears to me to be a disturbance of the lessee's possession (CHITTY, J.).

(3) Such an implied covenant [for quiet enjoyment] is, speaking generally, an unqualified covenant, but extends only to lawful interruptions (CHITTY, J.).—WALLIS v. HANDS, [1893] 2 Ch. 75; 62 L. J. Ch. 586; 68 L. T. 428; 41 W. R. 471; 9 T. L. R. 288; 37 Sol. Jo. 284; 3 R. 351.

2697. Interference not affecting title or possession.]—(1) In order to constitute a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment in a lease of land, it is sufficient that the lessee's ordinary & lawful enjoyment of the demised land be substantially interfered with by the acts of the lessor or those lawfully claiming under him, although neither the title to the land nor the possession of the land be otherwise affected.

(2) By a general system of drainage made by defts. in a particular district, various farms in that district were drained by several underground drains, by which the water was carried through all such farms. Defts. let one of those farms to pltf. with the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment against the acts of the lessors or any person lawfully claiming through or under them. Defts. had previously let another of such farms adjoining, but lying above pltf.'s farm, to one C., with a right to use the drains through pltf.'s land, so far as they were adequate to carry the water from C.'s farm. C. during pltf.'s tenancy, first, by an excessive user of the drainage system, which was properly constructed for the purpose of drainage, caused the water passing down the drains in his farm to escape & overflow into pltf.'s farm & damage his crops; secondly, by a proper user by C. of the drains passing through pltf.'s farm damage was also done to a field in pltf.'s farm by the escape of water, but this arose from one of the drains there having been imperfectly & improperly constructed:—Held: defts. were liable to pltf. for a breach of their covenant for quiet enjoyment in respect of this last damage, as there had been within the meaning of such covenant a substantial interruption by a person who lawfully claimed through defts.; but defts. were not liable for the damage done by the excessive user by C. of the drainage system, which was properly constructed, either under their covenant for quiet enjoyment or under the law of trespass or nuisance.

(3) It appears to us to be in every case a question of fact whether the quiet enjoyment of the land has or has not been interrupted (FRY, L.J.).—SANDERSON v. BERWICK-UPON-TWEED CORPN. (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 547; 53 L. J. Q. B. 559; 51 L. T. 495; 49 J. P. 6; 33 W. R. 67, C. A.

L.'s agreement contained a clause prohibiting the use of her flat otherwise than as a dwelling-house, & pltfs. agreement comprised a covenant for quiet enjoyment & a stipulation that they should not use their flat otherwise than as a private residence. Each agreement contained a stipulation that the tenants would not do anything on the demised premises which might be a nuisance to the lessors or to the occupiers of adjoining premises or which might tend to lessen the value thereof. In 1909 Mrs. L. subdivided her flat &, with the consent of the lessors erected an open-work iron staircase from the garden to an entrance to her flat on the first floor; & in 1910 let it & the part of her flat to which it gave access to K. that it was used as the only access to K.'s flat seriously affected the pltf's. privacy, for persons using the staircase could see directly into the rooms. Pltfs. brought this action claiming to have the staircase removed, an injunction, or compensation:—Held: L. had done nothing on her premises in breach of her covenant; the flats were not the subject of any general building scheme; the only interference with the pltf's. premises was interference with their comfort & privacy; that was not a sufficient interference to bring the case within the principle that a derogation from a grant was a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment; & the claim failed.

It appears to me that to constitute a breach of such a covenant there must be some physical interference with the enjoyment of the demised premises & that a mere interference with the comfort of persons using the demised premises by the creation of a personal annoyance such as might arise from noise, invasion of privacy or otherwise is not enough (PARKER, J.).—*BROWNE v. The flats were carried to a height which considerably exceeded that of the lessee's house, & the effect of this was to cause the smoke to be driven down pltf's chimneys by the impact of the wind on the flats, & thereby to render some of the rooms at times practically uninhabitable:—Held: what had been done by the lessor, although it did not affect the title to or possession of the house, was a substantial physical interference with its enjoyment, & therefore constituted a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.—*TEBB v. owner of the property let it to deft. for a term of years by a lease containing the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment. In 1895 the co. purchased the reversion of the property, subject to the lease. After this the co. proceeded with their works, & in so doing caused structural injury to deft.'s house; they also for some time rendered the access to his premises less convenient, by erecting hoardings which blocked up half the thoroughfare along the street in which his house stood, & by taking a great number of carts along that street. They also for three or four days incumbered a passage along which he had a right of way so that he could not use it. It was not alleged that the co. had exceeded their statutory powers or exercised them negligently. The co. sued deft. for rent, & he counter-claimed for damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held: (1) the covenant for quiet enjoyment was in force & was binding on the co., & they were liable to make compensation for any breach of it, but no action would lie against them for any breach of it committed in the reasonable & careful exercise of their statutory powers.

(2) Though structural injury to a house by the lessor is a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, no temporary inconvenience caused by the lessor, but not affecting the title or possession of the tenant, is a breach of the covenant.—*MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD & LINCOLNSHIRE RY. After the making of the indenture deft. excavated a quarry of ironstone, lying under some of the closes under which the demised mine was situate, but above that mine; & made holes from the strata of ironstone into the demised mine; & thereby caused quantities of water to percolate into the demised mine; & deft. also by excavating the quarry caused parts of the roof of the demised mine to fall in, & by reason of the premises the demised mine became flooded, & the working of the coal was rendered impracticable:—Held: though deft. had a right to excavate the quarry, yet as the excavation had caused an interruption of pltf's. occupation of the demised mine, deft. was liable for a breach of his covenant for quiet enjoyment.—*SHAW v. 2717. Vibration from works.]—In an action by lessor against lessee for rent, the lessee counter-claimed for damages from a nuisance caused by the lessor. It appeared that the lessor during the lease had pumped water from land adjacent to the demises premises by means of powerful engines, & that the lessee's house was damaged by the vibration caused by the working of such engines, to such an extent that the premises became useless to him, & that he was obliged to remove his business to another house, & in consequence incurred expense. There was evidence that the house at the commencement of the term was old & unstable, & that a house of ordinary stability would not have been injured by the vibration:—Held: (1) pltf. was liable for damages under the counterclaim, for there was an implied obligation on his part not to derogate from his grant by using his adjoining property so as to interfere with the stability of the premises which he had let, & he could not, therefore, rely upon any defence founded upon the state of such premises at the commencement of the term: (2) the damages recoverable by deft. were not confined to the value of the term which he had lost, but included all loss which had happened to him as a natural consequence of the wrongful acts of pltf., such as the expense of removing his business to other premises.

vi. Acts Prior to Demise.

2719. Lessor not liable.]—Deft. was owner of a house, which he let out in floors to separate tenants. Pltf.'s became tenants of the ground floor & basement under a lease, by which deft. covenanted that pltf.s might "peaceably hold & enjoy the demised premises during the term without any interruption by deft." The different floors were supplied with water by a cistern at the top of the house, & the water was distributed by a main pipe connected with the cistern, each floor having a separate branch inserted in the main pipe. Deft. paid the water rate, receiving from pltf.s one-half of the amount so paid, & the cistern was not demised to any one of the tenants. In consequence of the bursting of the branch service pipe supplying the first floor, a quantity of water flowed into the basement & injured pltf.s' goods. At the trial the jury found that the branch pipe was reasonably fit & proper for the purpose for which it had been fixed, & that deft. had not been guilty of any negligence in keeping & maintaining it:—Held: under the circumstances there had been no breach of deft.'s covenant for quiet enjoyment, & as the water had been stored in the cistern for the benefit of pltf.s, as well as of the other tenants, the doctrine laid down in Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330, did not apply.

It has been argued that a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment has been committed. But I think that the covenant is prospective in its operation. Deft. covenants that from the time of granting the lease pltf.s' enjoyment of the premises demised to them shall not be obstructed by any act done by deft. or any one for whom he is responsible. But the only act done by deft. was done before the lease was granted to pltf.s. . . . The covenant being prospective no breach of it was committed (BRETT, L.J.).

I agree then an act of omission may be tantamount to an act of commission so as to be a breach of the covenant [for quiet enjoyment] (COTTON, L.J.).—ANDERSON v. OPPENHEIMER (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 602; 49 L. J. Q. B. 708, C. A.

2734. Implied from relationship of tenancy.—Entry by title paramount.—Entry by superior landlord for rent.]—Deft., a leaseholder, underlet to N. & put him in possession under an agreement to grant a lease when N. should have paid £1,200, which he was to do by instalments in three years, in the meantime paying rent at certain days to deft., subject to distress for nonpayment. Deft. received rent from N. but omitted to pay the superior landlord, who distrained on N. for arrears due from deft. N. having become bkpt. :—Held: the damage incurred by this distress was a cause of action on which his assignee might sue.

The second objection is that, admitting the existence of the tenancy, there is no such implied duty on the part of the landlord as this action supposes. The duty alleged is, that C., by paying over to the superior landlord the rent received from the undertenant, should protect the under-tenant from the superior landlord's distress; & that is no more than one of the necessary consequences of the implied agreement on the part of every landlord for his tenant's quiet enjoyment. Even if there be no actual agreement by the mesne landlord to pay over to the superior landlord the rent received from the undertenant in order to secure his quiet enjoyment, still, in the case of Burnett v. Lynch, No. 2611, ante, it was held to be an implied duty on the part of the assignee of a lease to perform the covenants contained in it, in order to keep the assignor harmless: if that be a duty in the assignee, it is not easy to see why it should not be correlatively the duty of the assignor to protect the assignee by paying over to the lessor the rent received from the assignee (TINDAL, C.J.).—*HANCOCK v. At the expiration of the first quarter, the superior landlord distrained for rent :—Held: there was no implied duty in deft. to indemnify pltf. against this claim, although the agreement between them stipulated for a yearly rent; deft. having, by the subsequent clause, expressly undertaken to keep the reserved rent paid.—*UPTON v. 2746. When maintainable—Before entry by lessee—Express & implied covenant distinguished.—H. brought an action of covenant against T., & declared for a lease for years made by deft. by the word [demise] which imports a covenant, & then shows, that at the time of the lease made, the lessor was not seised of the land, but a stranger, and so the covenant in law broken. But he did not lay any actual entry by force of his lease, nor any ejectment of the stranger, nor any claiming under him; whereupon it was objected, that no action of covenant would lie, because there was no expulsion. But the whole ct. was of opinion that an action did lie; for the breach of covenant was, in that the lessor had taken upon him to demise that which he could not; for the word [demisi] imports a power of letting as [dedi] a power of giving. It is not reasonable to enforce the lessee to enter upon the land, & so to commit a trespass. But if it were an express covenant for quiet enjoying there perhaps it were otherwise.—*HOLDER v. It makes no difference that by a clause in the lease, stated in the declaration, it was agreed that, at a time previous to the above-named day, pltf. should be at liberty to enter the arable lands fit for wheat, for the purpose of sowing, paying at a certain rate for such lands as should be sown; & that pltf. had entered on a part of said arable lands, & sown before the day fixed for his taking possession of the premises generally, such entry being alleged in the declaration according to the fact.—*HAWKES v. The right conferred by this agreement, was expressed to be granted for the purpose of enabling pltf. to get & work manganese, & they were to pay by quarterly payments certain royalties therefor, & a minimum royalty was fixed. Clause 6 of the agreement provided that in the event of any royalties being in arrear for three months or a breach of any of the provisions of the agreement defts. might determine the licence & re-enter the premises. On May 17, 1898, a further agreement was made modifying the first agreement & providing for the payment of the royalties half yearly on Apr. 8 & Oct. 8, in each year. grantors of the lands & defts., & the former having requested ptfs. to pay the royalties to them instead of to defts., ptfs. on Oct. 7 declined to pay to defts. the royalties due on Oct. 8, & offered to refer the question to arbitration. On Oct. 12 defts. took forcible possession of the lands, & remained in possession of same. On Oct. 18 ptfs. tendered to defts. the money due, but the tender was refused. On Nov. 2 ptfs. instituted this action & now moved for an injunction to restrain defts. from taking or keeping possession of the lands in question & of the machinery & stock of manganese in or about the premises. The registered offices of ptfs. & defts. respectively were situate in London:—Held: if there was jurisdiction to grant the injunction sought for, such jurisdiction ought to be exercised with great caution, & as defts. were in actual possession of the lands they ought not to be disturbed & the motion must be refused.

What I am really asked to do is, in substance, in this action to give specific performance of an implied covenant for quiet enjoyment with reference to the lands, & in the present state of the authorities it is sufficient for me to say, for the present purpose, that if there be such a jurisdiction it is one which ought to be exercised with the greatest caution (STILLING, J.).—BLACK POINT SYNDICATE, LTD. v. 2751. Right to damages—Conveyance on sale distinguished.]—(1) The rule that where a contract for the sale of real estate goes off in consequence of a defect in the vendor's title, the purchaser is not entitled to damages for loss of the bargain, does not apply to the case of a lease granted by one who has no title to grant it.

A. was in possession of premises under a lease from B., which would expire on Dec. 4, 1864. In Feb. 1860, A., in consideration of a premium of £400, obtained from B. a further lease of the same premises for twenty-one years & twenty-one days, to commence from the expiration of the former lease. On the death of B., in 1863, it was found that B. was only tenant for life, with power to grant leases in possession, & not in reversion, & consequently that the lease so granted by him to A. in Feb. 1860, was void. A. thereupon obtained from the reversioners a fresh lease for seven years, at a considerable increase of rent, & sued C., B.'s exor., upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in the void lease:—Held: (2) A. was entitled to recover, besides the £400 premium which he had paid to B., & the costs of preparing the void lease, the value of what he had lost by B.'s breach of contract, substantially the difference between the value of the term professed to be granted to him by the lease of Feb. 1860, & that of the seven years' term which he obtained from the reversioners.—LOCK v. Measure of damages—Premium paid to lessor.]—Def. supposing himself the legal representative of lessee for years sold the term, & delivered the lease to pltf. but without any assignment or formal conveyance, saying the premises were his & if any thing happened he would see pltf. righted:—Held: pltf. might maintain an action against him for money had & received, the rightful administrator or tenant for years having ousted pltf. by ejectment.—CRIPPS v. After the death of the lessor, the lessee was evicted, & brought his action of covenant against the exors. of the lessor, who pleaded plene administravit; whereupon the lessee took out judgment of assets, quando, etc., & procured the damages to be assessed upon a writ of inquiry. He then filed his bill against the devisees of the lessor, for satisfaction of the damages & costs out of the real estate of the lessor devised by his will:—Held: (1) although damages recovered in an action of covenant, brought in respect of breaches of covenant happening after the death of testator, were not a debt within 3 Will. & Mar. c. 14, yet they were a debt payable out of the real estate of testator, under the charge of debts thereon created by his will; (2) the devisees were not bound by the action brought, or the inquiry as to damages had against the exors., but were entitled to have the question of the liability of the estate of testator on the covenant tried in an action defended by the devisees themselves; (3) the lessee having recovered damages upon the covenant in the action directed by the ct., to which the devisees were parties, was entitled, as against the devisees, to the amount of such damages, to his costs of the ejectment, of the action brought against the exors., of the action on the covenant to which the devisees were parties, & of the suit, & also to interest on the damages & costs, to be computed from the time the amount was ascertained & judgment entered up in the action to which the devisees were parties.—MORSE v. An action of trespass was afterwards brought by a person claiming under deft. against pltf., who gave notice of it to deft. Deft. paid no attention to the notice, & pltf., acting on his own judgment & without express authority, defended the action. A verdict was eventually found against him, & he was obliged to pay damages & costs. The leases under which he held gave him free admission to the stalls & boxes at all performances except balls & masquerades, & reserved to the lessor access for the purpose of painting & repairing. The lessor covenanted with A. for quiet enjoyment. A's lessor was himself the lessee of the whole of the theatre for a long term of years, & was under a covenant with the freeholder not to convert the theatre to any but theatrical purposes. The theatre was burnt down & a new one erected in its place, & A's lessor then let or agreed to let the whole of the building to persons other than A. for the purposes of holding religious meetings, & these persons took possession of the theatre & boarded over the site of A's stalls & took down the partitions between the boxes which had been constructed on the sites of those originally leased to A. Upon motion to restrain A's lessor & the persons in possession of the theatre from interfering with A's right:—Held: there was an infringement of A's right by his lessor & the persons in possession of the theatre; but the theatre not being ready to be used as a theatre, & the persons in possession undertaking not to renew their engagement with A's lessor, which was a short one, no injunction was granted, but A. was awarded a shilling damages & the costs of the suit.—LEADER v. MOODY (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 145; 44 L. J. Ch. 711; 32 L. T. 422; 23 W. R. 606.

2766. ——— No actual eviction.]—In an action for damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment in a lease, there being disturbance of enjoyment but not eviction, the measure of damages is the actual damages sustained up to the date of the issuing of the writ, & in the absence of evidence of actual damage, such damages will be nominal. A. & B. were lessees of C., & B. under his lease claimed a right of way over A's land. C. supported A's title, & insisted that B. had no such right of way. A. having brought an action against B. & C., claiming as against B. an injunction, & in the alternative, as against C. damages for the breach of his covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in A's lease, judgment was given for B. with costs against A., & £400 damages were awarded to A. in respect of C's breach of covenant, but the costs of B. ordered to be paid by A. were not included in such damages. On appeal as to the quantum of damages:—Held: (1) the damages, in the absence of evidence of actual damage, must be reduced to 40s.; (2) A. was entitled by way of increased damages to the costs of B.—CHILD v. In 1883, pltf. was informed by the ground landlord that she should have to quit the premises on Mar. 25, 1886, at which date the head lease expired. An agreement was then negotiated, & completed in 1885, for a new lease direct from the ground landlord to pltf. from Mar. 25, 1886, at a rent of £100. In Oct. 1885, pltf. commenced this action upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment, claiming as damages a year's interest on the sums which she had to pay under the agreement for repairs & as premium for the new lease:—Held: the action was maintainable, but pltf. was only entitled to nominal damages.—JONES v. 2770. Covenant by one with himself & others—
Vold.]—Testator directed that his trustees should, if requested to do so, give a lease of a freehold house forming part of his estate to his son C., at a rent to be fixed by arbitration, & that the lease should contain a lessee's covenant to repair & other covenants usual in a London repairing lease. C. was himself one of the trustees; he exercised his option, & a lease was executed between C. & his co-trustees as lessors & C. as lessee, whereby the trustees let the house to C. for twenty-one years, & he covenanted for himself, his exors., administrators & assigns, with the lessors, their heirs & assigns, amongst other things to keep the property in repair, & not to assign without the lessor's consent. C. entered into possession of & carried on business on the premises till he sold the business to a co., & assigned the term to them. They issued debentures secured by a trust deed which included the lease. The lessors brought this action against the trustees of the debenture trust deed for a declaration that the lease was binding on defts., & that they held the premises subject to the lessee's covenants. Defts., who had never been in possession, insisted that by reason of the facts that the covenantor was himself one of the covenantees, & that the covenants were joint & not joint & several, they were void, & created no obligation by which defts. were bound:—Held: there was no ground for rectification or for holding that defts. ought to be treated as tenants from year to year; the lease was not void in law, but the covenants were by one person with himself & others jointly & were void; & there was therefore no covenant which could run with the land & impose any personal liability on defts.—NAPIER v. WILLIAMS, [1911] 1 Ch. 361; 80 L. J. Ch. 298; 104 L. T. 380; 55 Sol. Jo. 235.

2771. Necessity for deed.]—In assumpsit, brought by the assignee of a reversion against a tenant in occupation under a lease for a term of years granted by the assignor, not under seal, for breach of covenants contained in the lease:—Held: on the issue raised by the plea of non tenuit, evidence was properly admitted to show, that deft. was in fact tenant of the land, on the terms stated in the declaration. Qu.: whether 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, which gives assignees of rever-

2774. —[The principle, that the assignee of a reversion is not bound by the terms in a lease not under seal, applies where the demise is of three windows in a factory, with the stipulation that the lessor shall provide steam power.

B. demised, by an instrument not under seal, three windows in a factory to ptfs. & stipulated to supply steam power. B. at the time of the demise was mtgor. in possession. His mtgees. sold to deft., who did not accept rent from ptfs., but continued to supply steam power. Subsequently a dispute arose as to the terms upon which ptfs. should continue tenants of deft., who thereupon cut off the steam power. Ptfs. having sued deft. for cutting off the steam power:—Held: no action would lie against deft.—SMITH v. EGGINGTON (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 145; 43 L. J. C. P. 140; 30 L. T. 521.

By a subsequent indenture, B. demised to pltf., the houses not having been built, & covenanted with pltf. that B., his heirs, exors. or administrators (not adding assigns), would pay the rent reserved by the former indenture, & perform, or effectually indemnify, pltf. of, & against, all the covenants therein contained on the lessee's or assignee's part to be performed. B. afterwards assigned to defts.:—Held: the covenant to pltf. was not such a covenant as would pass with the reversion of the land & bind assignees not named; & therefore pltf. could not recover against defts. for not building the wall or indemnifying pltf. against eviction for breach of the covenant to build.

Assigns are not named; & the covenant, concerning a thing not in esse at the time of the demise, does not pass to assigns unnamed (PARKE, B.).—DOUGHTY v. BOWMAN (1848), 11 Q. B. 444; 17 L. J. Q. B. 111; 12 Jur. 182; 116 E. R. 543.

The buildings were accordingly made, & the lessees subsequently became bkpt., & their assignees took possession of the premises. The underlease to B. of 1869 contained a covenant by B., for himself, his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns with the lessor, his exors., administrators & assigns, that he would, during the several terms thereby granted, pay all existing & future taxes, tithes, rates, assessments, & outgoings of every description, except the landlord's property tax, payable in respect of the premises thereby demised, & also would, during the term thereby granted, in respect of the premises firstly & secondly thereinbefore described & thereby demised, pay all such sums, not exceeding in any one year the sum of £100, as should for the time being be payable by the lessor, his exors., administrators, or assigns, on account of the like taxes, tithes, rates, assessments, & outgoings in respect of the premises comprised in & demised by the indenture of underlease of 1867. Ultimately the property comprised in the underlease of 1869 was assigned to C. for the residues of the terms granted by the underlease to B. The question was, whether the covenant as to the last mentioned taxes, etc. ran with the land, & whether C. was bound thereby, so as to make him liable to pay them:—Held: the case was governed by the rule in Spencer's Case, No. 2798, post, that the covenant as to those taxes, etc. was a covenant to pay a collateral sum of money, & was not one running with the land; & therefore C. was not liable thereunder.—*GOWER v. Breach that deft. refused to name a person to make the appraisalment:—Held: this covenant did not run with the land, & the assignee was not bound.

(2) Pltf. is not without remedy; he may bring an action against the original lessor, who always remains liable; but his right of action for a breach of this covenant cannot be extended to an assignee, without his being named in the covenant, as the subject-matter of it does not relate to a thing in esse at the time of the demise (per Cur.).—*GREY v. (2) This is a covenant in which the assignee is specifically named; & though it were for a thing not in esse at the time, yet being specifically named, it would bind him, if it affected the nature, quality or value of the thing demised, independently of collateral circumstances; or if it affected the mode of enjoying it (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—*CONGLETON CORPN. v. The lessor sold his entire property, including the demised land & the adjoining parcel, for an entire consideration in one entire contract, without offering the parcel to the covenantor:—Held: (1) this was no breach of the covenant; (2) the covenant did not enure to the assignee of the lease, though named.—*COLLISON v. wall upon part of the land demised, etc.:—Held: (1) if the lessee assigned his term, such covenant did not bind his assignee.

(2) Where a covenant extends to a thing in esse, parcel of the demise, such covenant shall go with the land, & shall bind the assignee, although he be not bound by express words.

(3) Although the covenant extends to a thing not in esse at the time of the demise, yet the assignee shall be bound if named, unless the thing to be done is merely collateral to the land & does not concern the thing demised.

(4) If a man leases sheep or other stock of cattle, or any other personal goods for any time, & the lessee covenants for him & his assigns at the end of the time to deliver the like cattle or goods as good as the things letten were, or such price for them; & the lessee assigns the sheep over, this covenant shall not bind the assignee, for it is but a personal contract, & wants such privity as is between the lessor & lessee & his assigns of the land in respect of the reversion. But in the case of a lease of personal goods there is not any privity, nor any reversion, but merely a thing in action in the personality, which cannot bind any but the covenantor, his exors., or administrators, who represent him (per CUR.).

(5) If a man makes a lease for years by the word concessi or demisi, which implies a covenant, if the assignee of the lessee be evicted, he shall have a writ of covenant (per CUR.).—SPENCER'S CASE (1583), 5 Co. Rep. 16 a; 77 E. R. 72.

2799. —J.—Where covenants relate to land, they run with it, attend upon the reversion, & the heir may bring the action.

J.—VOL. XXXI.

This was a covenant relating to the land, & for the advantage of the reversion; it would have gone to an assignee without his being named in the covenant, which proves it to be a covenant that runs with the land, & attends upon the reversion (per CUR.).—SALE v. KITCHINGHAM (1713), 10 Mod. Rep. 158; 88 E. R. 673.

2803. —J.—There is a demise of an incorporeal hereditament & one of the conditions attached to the lease is, that at its expiration the lessee shall leave the land as well stocked with game as it was when he entered. It is a covenant which affects the value of the estate, & is valuable to the owner only on that ground; it affects the enjoyment of the estate; & it relates to a matter to be done on the land & touches & concerns the thing demised; the advantage of the covenant therefore clearly passes to the assignees of the reversion (COCKBURN, C.J.).—HOOPER v. 2806. —J.—Land was demised to a lessee, who covenanted for himself & his assigns to repair buildings thereon subject to a clause of re-entry for breach. In an underlease, the underlessor covenanted for himself & his assigns with the underlessee to perform the covenants of the original lease so far as they related to such parts of the demised premises as were not comprised in the underlease. The underlessee covenanted to repair the premises demised by the underlease. The assignee of the superior lease committed a breach of his covenant to repair, & the successors in title of the superior lessor re-entered the whole of the premises & ejected the underlessee, who claimed damages for breach of covenant committed by the underlessor:—Held: the covenant in the underlease, as it did not concern the property demised therein, did not run with the land, & did not therefore bind the assignee of the superior lease, but was merely personal & collateral.—DEWAR v. GOODMAN, [1909] A. C. 72; 78 L. J. K. B. 209; 100 L. T. 2; 25 T. L. R. 137; 53 Sol. Jo. 116, II. L. Annotations:—Consd. *Ricketts v. 2807. ——[A covenant in a lease that the lessor & his assigns will not erect or permit to be erected any buildings in front of the building line on the land adjoining the demised premises is a covenant that "touches or concerns the thing demised" within the second resolution in Spencer's Case, No. 2798, ante, & therefore runs with the land.

A corp., owners of a building estate, granted a lease of a plot of land to A. for ninety-nine years, & entered into a restrictive covenant as above with A., his exors., administrators, & assigns, in respect of the plot of land adjoining the demised premises. Afterwards they entered into a building agreement with B. in respect of the adjoining plot of land, under which B. was to submit his building plans to them for approval, & on approval was to build forthwith in accordance with the plans, & on completion of his buildings was to have a ninety-nine years' lease of the plot. On B.'s plan, which did not show the building line, being approved, he forthwith erected his buildings, which infringed the building line. On complaint by the assignee of A.'s lease, the corp. served B. with a notice to observe the building line, but took no further steps against him, & subsequently proposed to grant him his lease:—Held: (1) covenant in A.'s lease touched or concerned the thing demised & ran with the land so as to entitle his assignee to sue the corp. on the covenant; (2) B. was an "assign" of the corp. & they were liable in damages for his breach of the covenant.

Semble: even if B. was not an "assign" the corp. had under the circumstances "permitted" a breach of the covenant.—RICKETTS v. ENFIELD (CHURCHWARDENS), [1909] 1 Ch. 544; 78 L. J. Ch. 294; 100 L. T. 362.

Not to sell off hay or manure.—R., being the mtgee. of a farm belonging to B. & the collector of the rents thereof for B., but not in possession of the land, entered into an agreement under seal, expressed to be made between R. "as agent, hereinafter called 'the landlord'" & S., "hereinafter called 'the tenant,'" whereby R. let the farm to S. from year to year. The agreement provided that the tenant should consume on the premises all hay & fodder, spread upon the land all manure & compost produced on the farm, not sell off any hay or fodder, & at the end of the tenancy leave all manure & compost. R. subsequently sold & conveyed the farm to C., who brought an action to restrain S. from acting in contravention of the above mentioned provision:—Held: (1) C., as assignee of the reversion, could enforce any covenant in the lease which ran with the reversion; (2) the covenant as to hay & manure did so run.—*CHAPMAN v. 2827. — Acts of lessor & those claiming under him—Lease pur autre vie.]—L., by an indenture reciting that he was possessed of a term for years provided one C. should so long live, granted & assigned the term to S., & covenanted, that notwithstanding any act, deed, matter or thing, done by him at any time heretofore, the lease was, at the time of the assignment, a good, valid & effectual lease, & that the same, & the term of eleven years therein expressed, was in full force & effect, & in nowise forfeited, surrendered, assigned, determined or otherwise become void or voidable, or prejudicially affected in any manner howsoever, otherwise than by effluxion of time; & also, that for & notwithstanding any such act, he, L., had full power to assign; & also for quiet enjoyment against all acts done by or through him. Before the assignment, C. had died, & L. knew the fact:—Held: (1) pltf. could not recover, for L.'s express covenants for title were only against the acts, etc., of himself & those claiming under him & therefore the determination of the term by the death of C. was not a breach of the covenants; (2) no absolute covenant for title could be implied from the words of grant, there being an express qualified title.—*STANNARD v. 2828. — Lease for lives—Does not imply all lives in existence.]—By deed of July, 1853, after reciting a lease of Mar. 10, 1847, from E. to deft., for the lives of A., B. & C. & the survivors or survivor of them, deft. conveyed the premises to pltfs., to hold for the lives of A., B. & C., & the survivors or survivor of them, & covenanted "that the lease of Mar. 10, 1847, is a good, valid & subsisting lease in the law, for the lives of A., B. & C., & the survivors or survivor of them, & is not forfeited, surrendered or become void or voidable." B. having died before July, 1853, pltfs. sued deft. for a breach of the covenant:—Held: the mention of the three lives was mere matter of description, & the covenant only amounted to a covenant that the lease was still subsisting, & not to an implied covenant that the three lives were still in existence.—*COATES v. (2) Semble: under the word "demise," the lessee may maintain an action of covenant against the lessor, for not having sufficient power to demise for the whole term, whereby pltf. was put to expense in procuring a better title for whole term.—FRASER v. SKEY (1773), 2 Chit. 640.

2854. ——— Lease by agent of lessor.]—Pltf. by his agent let a flat to deft. for a term of three years. The agent knew that deft. was the mistress of a certain man, & he assumed that the rent would come through her being a kept woman & would come from the man whose mistress she was; & he knew that the man went constantly to the flat to visit her. After the expiration of the term deft. continued as tenant from year to year. In an action to recover the rent:—Held: as the flat was let for an immoral purpose pltf. was not entitled to recover.—UPFILL v. WRIGHT, [1911] 1 K. B. 506; 80 L. J. K. B. 254; 103 L. 2855. Lessee obtaining possession by false representation—Of intention to carry on lawful trade—Subsequent immoral user.]—A. procured B. to grant him a lease of premises by means of a false representation that he intended to carry on a certain lawful trade therein. Having obtained possession, A. converted the premises into a common brothel, whereupon B. forcibly expelled him:—Held: A. might maintain ejectment—the fraudulent misrepresentation & the subsequent illegal use of the premises not being sufficient, at law, to avoid the lease.—FERET v. HILL (1854), 15 C. B. 207; 2 C. L. R. 1366; 23 L. J. C. P. 185; 23 L. T. O. S. 158; 18 Jur. 1014; 2 W. R. 493; 139 E. R. 400.

2856. Lessee's right of action—On covenant—Against assignee.]—A lessee of a house which, to his knowledge, had for many years been used as a brothel, assigned the lease absolutely, knowing that the assignee intended to use the house for the same purpose. The original lease contained covenants to deliver up at the end of the term, in good repair, & not to use the house as a brothel; & the assignment contained a covenant to indemnify the lessee from the covenants in the lease. The lessee having been compelled to pay for dilapidations at the end of the lease, sought to recover the amount from the estate of the assignee which was being administered:—Held: the assignment, & everything arising out of it, was so tainted with the immoral purpose, that pltf. could not recover.—*SMITH v. 2859. ——— User prohibited by statute.]—A local Act, for lighting & watching & preventing nuisances in the parish of St. Mary, Islington, enacted that "if any person should put or cause to be put, or cast out of any waggon, etc. in or near any of the roads, etc. within the said parish of St. Mary, Islington, or should put or cast, etc. within the said parish, & in or within a quarter of a mile of any of the said roads, etc. any noisome or offensive matter," such person might be apprehended & carried before a magistrate, etc.:—Held: the whole of the above clause applied to such nuisances only when committed within the parish of St. Mary, Islington, & not when committed out of the parish, although within a quarter of a mile of a road within it; & therefore a plea to an action for use & occupation of a night soil shoot, that it was an open space of ground situate in the parish of St. Pancras, & within a quarter of a mile of a road in St. Mary, Islington, & was demised by pltf. to deft., after the passing of the above Act, for the purpose of being used as a place of deposit for night soil & other noisome & offensive matter, was bad, after verdict for deft.—*FLIGHT v. C. guarantees the payment of the rent by B. To an action on the agreement by A. against C. on default of payment by B. C. pleaded that the agreement was made for the express purpose of enabling B. to use the said rooms so as to evade the law of excise:—Held: the plea was a sufficient answer to the action, the agreement being void for illegality.—RITCHIE v. SMITH (1848), 6 C. B. 462; 3 New Mag. Cas. 56; 18 L. J. C. P. 9; 12 L. T. O. S. 148; 12 J. P. 822; 13 Jur. 63; 136 E. R. 1329.

2863. Agreement unenforceable—Blasphemy.]—Deft. contracted to let rooms to pltf.; afterwards, discovering that they were intended to be used for the delivery of lectures maintaining that the character of Christ is defective & His teaching misleading, & that the Bible is no more inspired than any other book, he refused to allow the use of them, but did not assign this as a reason for his refusal. In an action for breach of contract:—Held: (1) the publication of such doctrines was blasphemy, & therefore the purpose for which pltf. intended to use the rooms was illegal, & the contract one which could not be enforced at law; (2) deft. was entitled to justify his refusal on this ground, notwithstanding his having assigned a different reason.—COWAN v. MILBOURN (1867), 1. R. 2 Exch. 230; 36 L. J. Ex. 124; 16 L. T. 290; 31 J. P. 423; 15 W. R. 750.

2864. Lease rendered illegal by statute after commencement.]—Deft. let the basement of a store to pltf. "with full & undisturbed right & liberty to store cartridges therein," & covenanted to keep the premises in proper repair & condition, so as to be available for storing cartridges, & covenanted for quiet enjoyment. Other parts of the store were at that time let to other persons for storing gunpowder. Soon afterwards Explosives Act, 1875 (c. 17), passed, making it illegal to store cartridges & gunpowder in the same building. Deft., upon the Act coming into operation, removed pltf.'s cartridges out of the building. A correspondence ensued, & deft. stated to pltf. that the basement was at pltf.'s disposal, but that if pltf. stored cartridges there, deft. must, to protect himself from liability, give notice to the authorities. Pltf. thereupon commenced his action to restrain deft. from obstructing the storing of his cartridges, & to compel deft. to do everything necessary to enable pltf. to store them there, & for damages:—Held: judgment must be entered for deft., for (1) there had been no eviction, the removal of pltf.'s cartridges being only a trespass; (2) there had been no breach of covenant by deft., for the covenant to keep the premises in proper condition for storing cartridges only referred to their physical condition; (3) the grant of liberty to store cartridges there did not import a warranty of the legality of so storing them, nor did anything in the lease bind deft. to procure licences to make the storage legal. Semble: an amendment converting a claim on the footing of a subsisting lease into a claim on the footing of eviction ought not to be allowed.—NEWBY v. SHARPE (1878), 8 Ch. D. 39; 47 L. J. Ch. 617; 38 L. T. 583; 20 W. R. 685, C. A.

To hold that under the lease of a shop, a back shop, & a cellar, there is necessarily inherent in the subject a prohibition against the use of it for the sale of goods occasionally by public auction, is a proposition which, I think, cannot be sustained (LORD WESTBURY).—*KEITH v. other than for the purpose of a private dwelling-house & would not without the lessors' licence in writing do or suffer to be done in or on the demised premises anything which might in the judgment of the lessors be or grow to the injury or annoyance of the lessors. Assignees of the lease let the premises to a sub-lessee who covenanted not to do or permit to be done any act or thing upon the premises which might be or grow to the annoyance damage or disturbance of the assignees, & not without the written consent of the assignees to assign, underlet, or part with possession of the premises or any part thereof, & not without such consent as aforesaid to put up any bill for the letting of lodgings but to use the premises as a private dwelling-house only. Without the consent of the assignees the sub-lessee let the premises in separate tenements to a number of weekly tenants. The assignees brought an action for possession against the sub-lessee & got judgment against him; but they did not join the weekly tenants as defendants in the action nor take any steps to eject them, but advised them to apply to the lessors for leave to remain in possession; agreed with them that their rent should be paid into a joint account in the names of one of the tenants & of the assignees' solrs.; wrote to the lessors to say that if the weekly tenants were not allowed to remain an application under s. 27 of Housing, Town Planning, etc., Act, 1919 (c. 35), was advised for leave to convert the premises into one or more tenements; & also wrote to the weekly tenants saying that the lessors were threatening proceedings for vacant possession, that in view of Increase of Rent & Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), & s. 27 of Housing Act, the legal position was uncertain, & that they would be well advised to instruct counsel in any proceedings rendered necessary by the lessors' action, of which action they expressed their disapproval. The lessors brought an action against the assignees upon a forfeiture for breach of covenant in "permitting" the premises to be used otherwise than as a private dwelling-house & for "suffering" to be done therein an act to the annoyance of the plffs. Defendants not having themselves used the premises or done any act therein contrary to the terms of the lease:—Held: the covenants not to "permit" the unauthorised user of the premises & not to "suffer" unauthorised acts therein did not bind defendants to do more than to take reasonable steps to secure that the premises should be used according to the terms of the lease & not otherwise, & they had not abstained from taking reasonable steps to secure that result merely by forbearing to take proceedings in ejectment against the under tenants the issue of which was rendered doubtful by the statutes above mentioned; in sympathising with the under tenants & even in advising them on their legal position defendants were not committing a breach of the covenants, & plffs.' case failed.—*BERTON v. 2871. — Depends on circumstances of each case.]—By a lease dated Mar. 24, 1919, T. demised to deft. R. a shop for fourteen years. The lease contained a covenant by R. that he would not use or exercise or "permit or suffer" any other person to use or exercise in or upon the demised premises any trade or business other than that of a bag manufacturer. There was also a covenant that the lessee or any permitted assignee or underlessee would not assign, underlet, transfer, or part with the possession of the premises, or any part thereof, or do or suffer any act whereby the same or any part thereof might become assigned or transferred to any other person without the consent of the lessor; & there was a proviso for re-entry on breach of either of those covenants.

In Oct. 1920, R., with T.'s consent, underlet the premises to deft. C. to be used for the business of a tobacconist. The underlease contained the same covenants—mutatis mutandis—by C. with R. as those entered into by R. in the lease to him, except that the business of a tobacconist was substituted for that of a bag manufacturer, & that the premises were not to be assigned or underlet by C. without the consent of both the superior & immediate lessors. On Nov. 3, 1920, pltf. agreed to purchase the fee simple in reversion of the demised premises. On Nov. 8, C., without the consent of either of the lessors, let part of the shop to G., who agreed not to use that part for any other business than that of a hairdresser; G. then went into possession & carried on—for several months in the name of C.—the business of a hairdresser, C. in the meantime concealing from both R. & pltf. the fact that he had underlet to G. & that G. was the proprietor of the hairdressing business. On Dec. 22, 1920, pltf. completed his purchase, & the premises were then conveyed to him expressly subject to the lease of Mar. 24, 1919. On Jan. 19, 1921, pltf.'s solrs., by arrangement with the vendor, received the rent due at Christmas, 1920, subject to its apportionment as between T. & pltf. Neither pltf. nor deft. R. knew that G. was in occupation of part of the shop or that he was the proprietor of the hairdressing business until Mar. 1921. As both defendants & C. refused to remedy the breaches when they came to pltf.'s knowledge, pltf. commenced this action to recover possession of the demised premises:—Held: (1) in the absence of facts which rendered it unreasonable for R. to bring an action against C. in respect of the breach, & seeing that C. could have no defence to such an action, R. in breach of the covenant in the lease of Mar. 24, 1919, had permitted & was permitting G. to carry on the prohibited business of a hairdresser; (2) as neither pltf. nor his solrs. knew, at the time of the receipt of the rent, that C. had underlet to G. or that G. was carrying on a hairdresser's business, such receipt did not amount to a general waiver of the covenant; & further, even if pltf. had at that time some general knowledge that a hairdresser's business was being carried on on the premises, yet such receipt, in the circumstances, would amount, at most, to a waiver of the breach up to the date thereof; (3) as to the covenant against underletting; although the conveyance to pltf. was made expressly subject to the lease to R., yet, in the absence of proof of waiver by T. (the vendor) or pltf., both of whom were ignorant of the breach committed by C. in underletting to G., the effect of that conveyance was, by virtue of s. 2 of Conveyancing Act, 1911 (c. 37), to pass to pltf., with the reversionary estate in the land, the right to enforce the condition of re-entry; (4) as deft. C. was guilty of a deliberate breach of the covenant by underletting to G. he was not entitled to the protection afforded to an underlessee by s. 4 of the Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1892 (c. 13).

It is not established by the authorities that in no circumstances can a covenantor be said to be permitting or suffering a breach of a continuous nature if in order to stop it he must have recourse to legal proceedings; every case must depend upon its own circumstances.—ATKIN v. ROSE, [1923] 1 Ch. 522; 92 L. J. Ch. 209; 128 L. T. 653; 67 Sol. Jo. 350.

SUB-SECT. 2.—NATURE OF COVENANTS.

A. Usual Covenants.

What are usual covenants.]—See Part XI., Sect. 2, ante.

2872. Restriction against trade—Particular trades.]—If an agreement for a lease contain no stipulation as to covenants, the party agreeing to take the lease has a right to a lease containing only usual covenants, & a restriction against particular trades, not being a usual covenant, cannot be introduced into the lease.—PROPERT v. PARKER (1832), 3 My. & K. 280; 40 E. R. 107. Annotation:—Reid. Porter v. Drew (1880), 5 C. P. D. 143.

2873. ———.]—An agreement for granting a lease, stipulating, that it should contain “the usual covenants between landlord & tenant,” does not include covenants in restraint of trade.

A., being entitled to a lease, containing covenants against carrying on particular trades, agreed with his tenant to grant him a lease, containing “the usual covenants between landlord & tenant,” & that the house should not be converted into a school. The tenant had notice, that A. was a lessee only:—Held: the tenant was not bound to accept an underlease, containing the restrictive covenants in the original lease.—VAN v. CORPE (1837), 3 My. & K. 269; 6 L. J. Ch. 208; 40 E. R. 102.

2874. ——— Other than particular trade—Licensed premises.]—BENNETT v. WOMACK, No. 2498, ante.

2875. ——— In trading locality.]—The purchaser of property has notice of the interests of a tenant in possession, & the purchaser of leaseholds has notice of what it is he purports to buy, & that he must be bound by all the covenants in the lease; but one who contracts for a lease from a party, with knowledge that he holds under a leasehold title, has notice of ordinary but not of unusual covenants in the original lease. Covenants in restraint of trade in a trading locality are not considered usual covenants. Deft. agreed with pltf. to take a house in the Strand, to be used for the business of printing. Nothing was said as to covenants. Pltf. was a lessee under a lease containing covenants against “obnoxious trades.” & deft. was told that the premises were leasehold. A reference as to title was directed, having regard to the covenants in the lease & the purposes for which the premises were taken.—WILBRAHAM v. LIVESEY (1854), 18 Beav. 206; 2 W. R. 281; 52 E. R. 81.

Annotation:—Reid. Reeve v. Berridge (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 523.

2876. Affirmative covenant to carry on particular trade.]—A. agreed to let, & B. to take a piece of land, with liberty to build thereon such warehouses, glasshouses, kilns, houses for workmen, & other erections necessary for carrying on the business of a glass factory, as he should think fit, for sixty-one years, at a certain rent; & B. agreed to pay the rent, to build in a substantial manner, & not to use the premises for any other purpose than a glass factory during the term. A lease & counterpart to be executed in conformity with the agreement, in which should be inserted all usual covenants:—Held: this agreement did not warrant the insertion in the lease of an affirmative covenant by the lessee, that he would carry on the business of a glass factory on the demised premises during the term.—DOE d. BUTE (MARQUIS) v. GUEST (1846), 15 M. & W. 160; 153 E. R. 804.

2879. ——— Covenant to use as private dwelling-house only.]—A covenant in a lease to use a house as a private dwelling-house only, runs with the land, though the word “assigns” be not used.—WILKINSON v. ROGERS (1863), 3 New Rep. 145; 9 L. T. 434; 28 J. P. 103; 10 Jur. N. S. 5; 12 W. R. 119; on appeal (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 62, L. J.J. Annotation:—Mentd. Reeves v. Cattell (1876), 24 W. 2882. Whether lessee bound—Covenant against particular trades.]—The conveyance of an estate to a purchaser & his heirs to the use that certain specified trades should not be carried on upon the premises:—Held: to be a stipulation in the nature of a covenant running with the land; but the owner of the estate could alone be restrained from carrying on the trades, as his tenant was no party to the suit.—HODSON v. COPPARD (1860), 29 Beav. 4; 7 Jur. N. S. 11; 9 W. R. 9; 54 E. R. 525; sub nom. HODGSON v. COPPARD, 30 L. J. Ch. 20.

2884. ———.]—About 1870 a considerable building property called “The B. Estate,” belonging to G. D. in fee simple, was in course of development on building agreements entitling the builders to leases, with an option of purchasing the fee simple, & in 1876 S. B. held one of the leases & options in respect of land & a workshop called 14, W. Road. G. D. died in 1882, having devised the B. Estate to E. D. & F. F., their heirs & assignees, on trust to pay the rents to E. D. for life, & after her death to stand seised upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint, & in default of appointment in trust for her right heirs. Soon after G. D.'s death S. B. exercised his option, & E. D. & F. F. conveyed 14, W. Road, to him in fee, subject to restrictive covenants, therein contained, by him with E. D. & F. F., their heirs & assigns, to the intent that the covenants might for ever thereafter run with the hereditaments thereby granted, that S. B. & all persons deriving title under him would not, without the written consent of E. D. & F. F., their heirs or assigns, or the persons deriving title under them or either of them (inter alia), (a) carry on or permit to be carried on on the premises conveyed any trade or business except that of a builder or coal merchant; & (b) would not do or permit on the premises any act, matter or thing whatsoever which might be a nuisance, annoyance or disturbance to E. D. & F. F., or the persons deriving title under them or either of them. F. F. died in 1885. E. D. died in 1917, having by her will exercised her power of appointment so as to make R. I. tenant for life of the portion of the B. Estate of which 14, W. Road, was part, & given him one-half of her residuary personalty. R. I. & F. R. E. were appointed her exors. S. B. died in 1883, having by his will vested in the trustees thereof 14, W. Road, which they let for a term of years to X. to be used, & which were used, for a business which was not permitted by covenant (a). X. in the course of this business committed breaches of covenant (b) as regarded annoyance & disturbance. R. I., as tenant for life of adjoining freehold lands also forming part of the B. Estate, sued S. B.'s trustees & X. for an injunction to restrain the breaches of covenant. At the trial F. R. E., the other exor. of E. D., was joined as co-pltf., he & R. I. being the legal personal representatives of the survivor of the original covenantants:—Held: (1) there was not enough in the words or contract of the conveyance to S. B. to annex the benefits of the covenants to the whole of the B. Estate then remaining in the hands of the covenantees or to any particular parts thereof; (2) the dispositions of E. D.'s will did not amount to an assignment to her devisees of the benefit of the covenants; but (3) the benefit could pass by operation of law as well as by express assignment, & that the covenants could be enforced by R. I. & F. R. E. as representing together both her real estate & personal estate.—IVES v. BROWN, [1919] 2 Ch. 314; 88 L. J. Ch. 373; 122 L. T. 267.

2885. Whether lessee entitled to benefit—Owners under mutual covenants.]—Where there are mutual covenants by owners of lands, their heirs & assigns, with the owners of adjoining lands, their heirs & assigns, to comply with certain stipulations [not to carry on certain trades] the subsequent lessee of one of the owners is entitled to the benefit of the covenants as ar assign, & can sue to restrain a breach.—TAITE v. GOSLING (1879), 11 Ch. D. 273; 48 L. J. Ch. 397; 40 L. T. 251; 43 J. P. 508; 27 W. R. 394.

2886. Whether underlessee bound—Covenant not to carry on dangerous trade.]—By a lease dated Dec. 20, 1897, D. demised certain premises to G., who covenanted for himself, his exors., administrators, & assigns (inter alia) not to use or occupy the same or any part thereof as a dwelling-house or sleeping place, or to use the same so as to cause a nuisance, annoyance, or damage to the owners or occupiers of the offices or rooms in the same house or adjoining houses, & not to carry on any noisy or dangerous trade, & also not to do or suffer to be done upon the said demised premises or any part thereof anything which might render any increased or extra premium payable for the insurance of the premises against fire, or which might make void or voidable any policy for insurance. There was also a covenant not to assign without licence. In Aug. 1903 G. assigned to E. with the lessor's consent & on Oct. 18, 1904, E. sub-demised to D. On Nov. 12, 1904, the lessor consented to the underlease, but no explanation of what was intended to be done was given him, & no copy of the agreement was shown.

The sublessee exhibited & sold an incandescent lamp in which petrol was used. The insurance co. at the expiration of the period for which the premises were insured refused to renew, & although negotiations were entered into for the renewal of the insurance at 12s. 6d. instead of 2s. per cent., they fell through. The lessor now applied for an injunction restraining the sublessee from breaking the covenants:—Held: deft. must be restrained by injunction from using the premises in a manner prohibited by the lease of which he had constructive notice.—TEAPE v. DOUSE (1905), 92 L. T. 319; 21 T. L. R. 271; 49 Sol. Jo. 283.

2887. Whether lessor bound—Breach by tenant—Mandatory injunction.]—A railway co. having conveyed to A. a piece of land abutting on their viaduct, with a covenant not to build within six feet of the wall of the viaduct, the ct., in an action against A.'s widow, who took by assignment, for building against the wall in breach of the covenant, in which action she had suffered judgment by default, refused to grant an injunction against her commanding her to remove the building; it appearing that it had been erected by her under-tenant, & consequently that she could not obey the writ, if granted.—*LONDON & SOUTH WESTERN RY. 2885 i. Whether lessee entitled to benefit—Owners under mutual covenants.]—The fact of several feuars of neighbouring plots of building land in the same street holding from a common superior does not, by itself, entitle one of those feuars to claim the benefit of restrictions contained in the feu contract of another, unless some mutuality & community of rights & obligations is otherwise established between them, which can only be done by express stipulations in their respective contracts with the superior, or by reasonable implication from reference in both contracts to a common plan or scheme of building, or by mutual agreement between the feuars themselves.—HISLOP v. LECKIE

2888. Whether lessee bound—Right to indemnity by purchaser—Notice.]—In 1867 pltf. conveyed to a purchaser in fee simple certain hereditaments & appurtenances adjoining their railway, & by the deed of conveyance the purchaser covenanted "for himself, his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, that he, the said purchaser, would not erect or build any erections or buildings of any kind whatsoever within ten feet of the roadway or viaduct of pltf. without their permission in writing first had & obtained." In the following year the purchaser conveyed the said hereditaments & appurtenances to a person since dead, testator of deft. Bull, & said testator took & accepted the said conveyances without notice or knowledge of the said covenant other than such constructive notice, if any, as he might be deemed to have had by reason of the said deed of 1867 being a title deed of the premises. In 1869 the said testator rebuilt the said hereditaments & erected on the premises a hotel, part of which stood within ten feet of the roadway or viaduct of pltf., & he demised the said hotel & premises for fifty years upon a certain rent to a woman, who assigned the lease to the second deft. Francis. A covenant was contained in the lease to the effect that the lessee should not make any alteration in the premises without the lessor's consent in writing, but neither the lessee nor defts. had any notice of the covenant in the conveyance of 1867 other than such constructive notice (if any) as before mentioned in the case of the said testator. In 1881 deft. Francis increased the height of that part of the erection which was within ten feet of pltf.'s roadway or viaduct, having previously in consideration for the payment of a sum of money obtained the written authority of deft. Bull for doing so. Pltf. had no knowledge of this erection by deft. Bull, or the alteration by deft. Francis, until they were both completed in 1881:—Held: pltf. were entitled to an injunction to both defts., requiring them to pull down the said erections, & deft. Francis was not entitled to be indemnified by deft. Bull.—LONDON, CHATHAM, & DOVER RY. CO. v. BULL (1882), 47 L. T. 413, D. C.

2889. — Statutory prohibition—Superfluous land.]—An Inclosure Act passed in 1806 provided that no buildings should at any time thereafter be erected on a certain strip of land. In 1805 a railway co. under their statutory powers acquired a portion of the strip of land for the purposes of their undertaking. A part of the land thus acquired became superfluous land & the co. in 1868 sold & conveyed the superfluous part to a purchaser who demised it to deft. Deft. in 1885 commenced building on the land:—Held: the land acquired by the co. was freed from the prohibition of building only for the purposes of the co.'s undertaking & when part of it was sold as superfluous land the prohibition of building revived in respect of that part. An injunction to restrain deft. from building on the land in contravention of the provisions of the Inclosure Act was granted at the suit of an owner of adjoining land.—BIRD v. EGGLETON (1885), 29 Ch. D. 1012; 54 L. J. Ch. 819; 33 W. R. 774; sub nom. BIRD v. PONSFORD, BIRD v. EGGLETON, 53 L. T. 87; 49 J. P. 644; 1 T. L. R. 508.

2891. Whether purchaser bound—Breach by lessee—Breach not continuing breach.]—The purchaser of part of a freehold building estate covenanted with the vendor for himself & his assigns to erect no other than private residences & to submit plans for approval before commencing to build. The purchaser granted a building lease with covenants similar to those in his conveyance; the lessees, without submitting plans for the vendor's approval, commenced a building which was alleged to be & was held a breach of the covenant. The lessees became bkpt., & their trustees having disclaimed the lease, the purchaser took possession of the land & offending building. The vendor having sold the rest of the estate to pltf. with the benefit of the purchaser's covenants, pltf. brought an action against the purchaser to compel removal of the building, & for damages:—Held: (1) there was no continuing breach, the covenant having been broken once for all when the building was erected contrary to it; (2) the breach was committed not by the purchaser, but by his lessees, & he had not by his conduct rendered himself liable for the violation of the covenant; & neither at law nor in equity was pltf. entitled to any relief.—POWELL v. HEMSLEY, [1909] 2 Ch. 252; 78 L. J. Ch. 741; 101 L. T. 262; 25 T. L. R. 649, C. A.

2892. General rule.]—ZETLAND (EARL) v. HISLOP, No. 2942, post.

2893. Whether tenant bound—Notice.]—The owner of a freehold house had entered into a covenant with pltf., who was a previous owner, that the building should not be used as a beershop. The house was afterwards let to deft. as tenant from year to year, without express notice of the covenant:—Held: although the covenant might not at law run with the land, deft. was bound by it in equity. The rule that a purchaser who does not inquire into his vendor's title is affected with notice of what appears upon it, applies equally to a yearly tenant, as to the purchaser of a greater interest.

A covenant by a purchaser of land, not naming his assigns, that no building erected on land shall be used as a beershop, does not run with the land (TURNER, L.J.).—WILSON v. HART (1866), 1 Ch. App. 463; 35 L. J. Ch. 569; 14 L. T. 499; 30 J. P. 582; 12 Jur. N. S. 460; 14 W. R. 748, L. J.J.

rentcharge; & the conveyance contained a covenant by A., his heirs, exors., & administrators, with ptff., his heirs & assigns, that he & they would not use or occupy, or permit to be used or occupied, the building "as an inn, public-house, or taproom, or for the sale of spirituous liquors, or ale or beer." In 1857 deft. B. became tenant from year to year of the house, using & occupying it for the business of a grocer. In 1862, A. demised the house & shop to B. for twenty-one years at a yearly rent; the only restrictive covenant being a covenant by B. that "no offensive business or occupation or nuisance shall be carried on or committed on the premises, & that same shall be used as a dwelling-house & shop only." In 1866, B., as the agent of a firm of London wine merchants, began, in the course of his business as a grocer, to sell on the premises wine & spirits, but in bottle only. On bill for an injunction against A. & B., it was found, as the result of the evidence, that B. had no knowledge of the covenant in the original deed:—Held: (1) notwithstanding, he was put upon inquiry, & was fixed with constructive notice of the covenant; (2) the words, "for the sale of spirituous liquors," did not prevent the sale of wine, but extended to the sale of spirituous liquors in bottle; & injunction granted accordingly. Bill dismissed against A. with costs.—FEILDEN v. SLATER (1869), 1 L. R. 7 Eq. 523; 17 W. R. 485; sub nom. FIELDEN v. SLATER, 38 L. J. Ch. 379; 20 L. T. 112.

His assignee built a house on the land, & let it from year to year to a tenant, who opened it as a public-house. In the conveyance in 1875 to F. of part of a building estate purchased by him, F. covenanted for himself, his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, with the owner or owners for the time being of the remainder of the property, not to carry on the trade of retailer of wine, spirits, or beer on the land purchased. F. leased to D., who sub-leased to J., neither D. nor J. having actual notice of the restriction. J. opened a shop for the sale of wine & beer to be consumed off the premises. Upon a motion for an injunction by T., the purchaser of another part of the building estate:—Held: J. was liable to the covenant.—THORNEWELL v. JOHNSON (1881), 50 L. J. Ch. 641; 44 L. Further portions of the estate were sold in 1870 by the then trustees to G., who covenanted with the vendors not to use or permit to be used any building erected on the land & premises intended to be thereby assured as a tavern, public-house, or beer-shop. The rest of the estate was sold to other persons. In 1879 H. purchased from G. part of the land comprised in G.'s purchase of 1870, & entered into a covenant with G., in terms similar to those of the covenant in the deed of 1870. I., a yearly tenant under H. of one of the houses, having obtained an "off license" sold under it beer which was not drunk upon the premises:—Held: the property was bound by the restrictive covenant entered into by the vendors in 1803, & B., an assign of A., was entitled to an injunction & damages against H. & I., in respect of the breach of covenant in selling beer under an "off license."—*NICOLL v. Ejectment having been brought on a proviso for re-entry for the breach of the above covenant, on the ground that the excise duties & licences for dogs, men servants, horses, etc., had been received & granted on the premises by the post office clerks:—Held: there had been no breach of the covenant.—*WADHAM v. 2902. Business of outfitter.—A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to use the premises for any business except that of an outfitter without the licence in writing of the lessor. It also contained a proviso for re-entry in case the lessee should "make default in the performance of any of the covenants upon his part to be performed." The original lessor gave to the original lessee licence in writing to use the premises for a business other than that of an outfitter. The successor in title of the original lessee used the premises otherwise than for the business of an outfitter. In an action of ejectment by the successor in title of the original lessor:—Held: the proviso for re-entry applied only to breaches of positive & not of negative covenants. Seemle: there was no breach of covenant.—*HARMAN v. 2903. Restaurant—Fried fish shop.—A lease of premises contained a covenant restricting the lessee from carrying on on the premises the business of a "fishmonger" or any other trade which should be a nuisance or an annoyance to the tenants or occupiers of any messuage in the neighbourhood. The lessee let a part of the premises to a tenant who agreed not to use the premises "otherwise than as a restaurant" & not to do upon the premises any act or thing which should or might be a "nuisance, annoyance, or inconvenience" to the lessee or her tenants or the occupiers of any adjoining houses or the neighbourhood. The tenant set up & carried on on the premises the business of a fried fish shop for the sale of cooked fish for consumption on & off the premises. The occupier of the adjoining house had complained of the annoyance caused by the steam & smell from the fish shop. In an action by the lessee for an injunction to restrain the tenant from using the premises otherwise than as a restaurant, or so as to be an annoyance or inconvenience to occupiers in the neighbourhood:—Held: the carrying on of the business of a fried fish shop was not the carrying on of the business of a "fishmonger" within the meaning of the covenant in the lease; but the use of the premises as a fried fish shop was a use of the same "otherwise than as a restaurant" & was an "annoyance or inconvenience" to the occupiers of adjoining houses & the neighbourhood, & the lessee was entitled to the injunction claimed.—ERRINGTON v. BIRT (1911), 105 L. T. 373.

2904. Business of hosier, hatter & mercer—Sale of overcoats & sports jackets.—The lessees of a shop covenanted in their lease that the demised premises should not without the consent in writing of the lessors be used in any way except for the purpose of carrying on thereon the business or businesses of a hosier or hatter & mercer, including the sale of fancy waistcoats & mackintoshes. They sold amongst other goods, raincoats & sports jackets. In an action brought by the lessors for an injunction to restrain them from using the premises otherwise than in accordance with the covenant & for damages for breach of covenant:—Held: the fact that it was thought necessary to mention fancy waistcoats & mackintoshes in the covenant showed that the parties did not regard the sale of such goods as forming part of the business of a hosier, & upon the true construction of the covenant in question the business of a hosier did not include the sale of overcoats, not being mackintoshes, or sports jackets.—*WARTSKI v. The lessee kept a day school, & also had a dancing class on the premises once or twice a week, & placards were published stating that the house was open as a dancing academy on certain evenings:—Held: this was a breach of the covenant.—WICKENDEN v. WEBSTER (1856), 6 E. & B. 387; 25 L. J. Q. B. 264; 27 L. T. O. S. 122; 2 Jur. N. S. 590; 4 W. R. 562; 119 E. R. 909.

2908. — Taking in paying guests.—PORTER v. GIBBONS & BISSETT (1904), 48 Sol. Jo. 814, C. A.

2909. ——By a sub-lease dated Apr. 14, 1921, a dwelling-house in London was sub-let for a term of seven years from Mar. 25, 1921, at the yearly rent of £180. The sub-lease contained a covenant "that the lessee his exors. administrators & assigns will not at any time during the said term use or permit the said dwelling-house & premises to be used for the purpose of any trade or business whatsoever, . . . or otherwise than as a private dwelling-house or professional residence only." Deft. was an assignee of the original sub-lessee, & having taken the house, although it was beyond her means, she made a practice of taking in friends & others as paying guests in order to meet rent, rates & outgoings. These paying guests were either friends or recommended by friends, & were secured by private notification & never by public announcement. In an action by the sub-lessors for an injunction to restrain deft. from doing this on the ground that it constituted a breach of the covenant:—Held: deft. was committing a breach both of the part of the covenant against using the premises for the purpose of any trade or business & of the part of the covenant against using the premises otherwise than as private dwelling-house or professional residence only, & an injunction must be granted to restrain deft. from committing this breach.—THORN v. MADDEN, [1925] Ch. 847; 41 T. L. R. 628; 70 Sol. Jo. 75.

2910. — Conversion of building into flats.—A lessee covenanted not to make any alteration in the arrangement or appearance of the demised premises; not to use the demised premises except as a private dwelling-house; & not to do any act in or upon the premises which would be or could become a nuisance to the lessors, owners, or occupiers of the neighbouring messuages. The lease was one of a number of similar leases granted to the builders of the neighbouring houses on the same estate, & containing similar covenants. Deft., without the consent of the lessor, by certain internal structural alterations, converted the premises, which previously had been used only as a private dwelling-house, into three flats & a maisonnette, & sub-let them to different tenants:—Held: those operations constituted breaches of all the covenants.—DAY v. WALDRON (1919), 88 L. J. K. B. 937; 120 L. T. 634; 35 T. L. R. 310; 63 Sol. Jo. 497; 17 L. G. R. 305.

2911. — Power of court to vary lease—Housing & Town Planning Act, 1919 (c. 35), s. 27.—The above sect. provides that: "Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the county ct. on an application by the local authority or any person interested in a house that, owing to changes in the character of the neighbourhood in which such house is situate, the house cannot readily be let as a single tenement but could readily be let for occupation if converted into two or more tenements & that, by reason of the provisions of the lease or of any restrictive covenant affecting the house or otherwise, such conversion is prohibited or restricted, the ct. . . . may vary the terms of the lease or other instrument imposing the prohibition or restriction so as to enable the house to be so converted. . . .":—Held: the sect. is not confined to houses which if converted into tenements could readily be let for occupation by persons of the working class, but is of general application, & applies where the house if converted could be let for occupation by persons of any class.—JOHNSTON v. MACONOCHE, [1921] 1 K. B. 239; 90 L. J. K. B. 83; 124 L. T. 323; 85 J. P. 18; 37 T. L. R. 48; 18 L. G. R. 806, C. A.

2914. — Conversion of flats into offices—Implied covenant by lessor—As to other premises in same building—Express covenants by lessees of other portions.—Pltf. took a lease of a flat in a building from deft., pltf. covenanting to use the flat for residential purposes only. The other flats in the building were let by deft. with similar covenants by the lessees, but there was no express corresponding covenant by deft. as to the use of the flats. Deft. subsequently let some flats in the building to the Govt. for public offices, & possession was given to them:—Held: there had been a breach of an implied covenant by deft. that the flats should be used for residential purposes only; but an injunction was refused on the ground that deft., having given possession, could not comply with the order, & an inquiry was directed as to damages sustained by pltf. The ct., on appeal, varied the order by directing an inquiry as to damages sustained by pltf. by reason of any lettings by deft. in breach of his covenant up to the present time, & granting an injunction restraining any future lettings in breach of the covenant.—GEDGE v. BARTLETT (1900), 17 T. L. R. 43, C. A.

Annotation:—Reid. Bickerstaff, [1909] 2 Ch. 305.

2915. — Conversion of flats into hotel.—Held: the conversion of flats in a building into an hotel was a departure from the scheme in accordance with which the building was to be managed, namely, as residential flats suitable to the convenience of all persons who should be tenants of the flats.—ALEXANDER v. 2925. — Roman Catholic sisterhood—Supported by donations & private property of inmates.]

—(1) The lessee covenanted not to use, or suffer to be used, the premises for the business of a schoolmaster or schoolmistress, or for any other trade or business:—Held: an establishment of Roman Catholics, consisting of a lady superioress, sisters, boarders, etc., many of them being received because they had been abandoned by their friends for change of faith, & supported by donations & the private property of the ladies, was not a breach of the covenant.

(2) A greengrocer was allowed to keep his horse & cart on the premises; it was taken out in the morning, used for the purposes of his trade, & returned in the evening; the baskets used in the trade were also left in the same way:—Held: evidence for the jury of a trading within the covenant. So, where a plumber was allowed to keep his tools & some of his lead in the coachhouse.—DOE d. MACKENZIE v. BAYLIS (1851), 17 L. T. O. S. 172, N.P.

2929. — Home for working girls.]—The lease of a house contained a covenant that the lessee should not use, exercise, or carry on upon the premises any trade or business of any description whatsoever:—Held: a charitable institution called a “Home for Working Girls,” where the inmates were provided with board & lodging, whether any payment was taken or not, was a business, & came within the restrictions of the covenant.

It is not essential that there should be payment in order to constitute a business; nor does payment necessarily make that a business which without payment would not be a business.—ROLLS v. MILLER (1884), 27 Ch. D. 71; 53 L. J. Ch. 682; 50 L. T. 597; 32 W. R. 806, C. A.

c. What constitutes breach—Business affecting insurance.]—A lessee for a term of years stipulated that he would not carry on any business that would affect the insurance. He made an underlease omitting any such stipulation, & the underlessee having commenced the business of rectifying high wines, was restrained.—ARNOLD v. WHITE (1856), 5 Gr. 371.—CAN.

d. — User of premises for pawn-broking.]—A covenant not to us

Sect. 3.—Restrictive covenants as to user: Sub-sect. 4, A. & B. (a) & (b) i. & ii.]

2930. — Letting gable ends to billposters.]—A lease contained a covenant that the lessee, his exors., administrators, & assigns would not use, exercise, or carry on, or permit to be used, exercised, or carried on upon the demised premises, or any part thereof, any trade or business whatsoever, but would keep the demised house as & for a private dwelling-house. The lessee let the gable ends of the house to a billposting firm as a billposting station, & the billposters displayed large advertisements thereon:—Held: the lessee had thereby committed a breach of covenant.—TUBBS v. ESSER (1909), 26 T. L. R. 145.

2931. — Sub-letting for purposes of trade.]—By Increase of Rent & Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 5 (1), "No order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which this Act applies, or for the ejection of a tenant therefrom, shall be made or given unless (a) any rent lawfully due from the tenant has not been paid, or any other obligation of the tenancy (whether under the contract of tenancy or under this Act) . . . has been broken or not performed."

A dwelling-house to which the Act applied had been let by pltf. in 1915 to Mrs. A. on a yearly tenancy agreement, one of the terms of which was that the tenant should use, occupy & keep it as a private dwelling-house & not permit the same to be used for the carrying on of any trade or business without pltf.'s consent in writing. In 1917 Mrs. A. died & Mr. A. & family continued to occupy the house upon the same terms. In breach of the agreement & without applying to pltf. for her consent, Mr. A. sub-let a portion of the premises to deft., who carried on business as a piano tuner in the portion of the premises sub-let to him. Subsequently Mr. A.'s tenancy was determined by mutual agreement & the sub-tenant remained in possession of his part of the premises & refused to vacate it when requested by pltf. to do so. In an action by pltf. to recover possession of the premises:—Held: the word "tenancy" in s. 5 (1) (a), was in such a case as the present not to be limited to the statutory tenancy subsisting between pltf. & deft., but extended also to the original contractual tenancy as well, & the original tenant having broken the terms of his tenancy agreement, the case was therefore one which fell within the words of (a) "or any other obligation of the tenancy . . . has been broken or not performed." Accordingly pltf. was entitled to succeed & to recover possession from deft.—CHAPMAN v. HUGHES (1923), 129 L. T. 223; 39 T. L. R. 260; 67 Sol. Jo. 518; 21 L. G. R. 350.

2936 i. Covenant not to engage in specified trade—Sale of prohibited articles incident to tenant's business.]—The proprietress of several adjoining shops let one to a firm of boot & shoe sellers, the lease containing an undertaking by the lessor not to let any of the other shops "for the purpose of being occupied for a business of similar nature." She subsequently let one of these shops to a firm of naval outfitters for the purposes of their business, which consisted in the supply of everything connected with officers' outfits including boots & shoes. 2933. Covenant not to engage in specified trade—Carrying on part of forbidden trade—Trade of butcher—Sale of raw meat.]—A covenant in a lease, that the lessee shall not exercise the trade of a butcher upon the premises, is broken by there selling raw meat by retail although no beasts were there slaughtered.—DOE d. METROPOLITAN RY. CO. (1876), 34 L. T. 774.

2937. — Auctioneer.]—The letting of premises to an auctioneer for the purpose of carrying out a sale therein of furs & fur-lined goods is not a breach of a covenant not to carry on "the business of a draper," or to allow the premises to be used "for the sale of or dealing in drapery goods."—WILLS v. ADAMS (1908), 25 T. L. R. 85.

—See, also, No. 3002, post.

2938. — Carrying on prohibited trade as accessory to tenants' main business—Sale of refreshments to customers—By grocer.]—Defts. were bound by a covenant in the lease of their house not to use the same as a coffee-house. Defts. were dealers in tea, coffee & other groceries; but they proposed, as ancillary to their business, & for the convenience of their customers, to sell light refreshments consisting of cups of tea & coffee, bread & butter, pastry, ham sandwiches & pork pies, to be consumed on the premises:—Held: the sale of light refreshments was carrying on the business of a coffee-house keeper, & was a violation of the covenant, injunction granted.—FITZ v. LES, [1893] 1 Ch. 77; 62 L. J. Ch. 258; 68 L. T. 108; 37 Sol. Jo. 25; 2 R. 132, C. A.

2939. — Covenant not to carry on business similar to that of hotel & restaurant—Sufficient similarity to compete.]—Pltfs. granted a lease to the A. B. co. containing a covenant that the tenants would not carry on the business of a restaurant similar to that carried on by R., another tenant of pltfs. R. was an hotel-keeper who had a restaurant on licensed premises connected with his hotel. The A. B. co. carried on a restaurant at which they sold tea, coffee, cocoa, pastry, &

& damages in respect of breach of contract:—Held: the business of the naval outfitters was not similar in nature to the business of the pursuers, & accordingly, defender had not committed a breach of her undertaking.—RANDALL (H. E.), LTD. v. SUMMERS, [1919] S. C. 396.—SCOT.

e. — Chandler—Selling candles.]—A. was a lessee for years under a lease containing a covenant against carrying on the trade of a chandler on cold meat, but not any hot meat except beef pies, & this was not objected to. The A. B. co. having assigned their lease to deft., he proceeded in his restaurant to sell hot meat & other things not sold by the A. B. co. Deft. had not a license for the sale of intoxicants, nor a victualler's license; his establishment was on a much smaller scale than that of R., his premises were of an inferior class to those of R., & his prices were much lower:—Held: the test whether deft.'s business was similar to that of R. was whether it was sufficiently like it to compete with it, & judging by this rule, although there were considerable differences between R.'s business & that of deft., deft.'s business was similar to that of R., & an injunction must be granted in the terms of the covenant, with a proviso that it was not to prevent deft. from selling any of the articles in which the A. B. co. had dealt.—DREW v. GUY, [1894] 3 Ch. 25; 63 L. J. Ch. 547; 71 L. T. 220; 58 J. P. 803; 7 R. 220, C. A.

(b) Licensed Premises, etc.

i. In General.

2942. Whether valid.—A restriction in a feu charter, purporting to bind not only the original contracting feuar & his heirs, but also his assignee or any tenant or possessor of the houses to be erected on the feu, & power to enforce or dispense with it, is given not to the disponent or his heirs but to the superior for the time being: the restriction, unless repugnant to the nature of the estate taken by the feuar or to public policy, is a condition of the feu & runs with the land against singular successors. In all cases of restrictive conditions in a feu charter, the superior must have power to enforce them, or to dispense with them according to his own will or not, whether the charter is so expressed or not, unless the benefit of them & the right to enforce them are communicated to other feuars. A restraint against carrying on the trade of a publican is as good in law, & as capable of running with the land, as a restraint against carrying on any other business; & the fact that restrictions are placed by statute upon the freedom of that particular trade constitutes no reason why a private contract to prevent it from being carried on, without the consent of the superior should be held invalid or contrary to law. Feu rights of land in G., a town of 5,000 inhabitants, contained restrictions against retailing malt or spirituous liquors or allowing the same to be sold or retailed within the buildings erected on the feus without the superior's permission. The superior sought an interdict to prohibit defenders, the feuars, from continuing to sell any kind of malt or spirituous liquors, etc., alleging that the whole of the town was built on ground held of him as superior; that he was proprietor of certain houses in the heart of the town at a rental of £750; that he had still a large extent of ground in & adjacent to the town available for feuing, & that his mansion house was within half a mile of the town; & that these properties were damaged by the existence of so many public-houses. Defenders pleaded no interest to sue the action, acquiescence & prescriptive use. On the question of relevancy:—Held: (1) the restrictions sought to be imposed were not personal or inconsistent with public policy nor repugnant to pursuer's estate they relating to the use & employment of buildings erected on the land; (2) the interest to sue the action was connected with patrimonial rights, & the superior's case as shown on the record was sufficient to entitle him to the relief which he prayed; (3) it was the plain intention of the contracting parties that the superior should determine whether there are to be public-houses upon any of the feus, & if so, their number & position & accordingly the superior in granting his license to certain feuars to sell liquor was in no sense departing from or waiving the prohibition. But it was a different question in all or some of the cases, whether pursuer might not be seeking to enforce the restrictions under circumstances, or in a manner, which ought to deprive him of the assistance of the ct. there being facts averred from which, if proved or admitted, it might be legally inferred that successive superiors had so acquiesced in the feuar's use of their premises for the sale of liquor that the prohibition must be held to have been unconditionally discharged. But the record leaving it open to the superior to adduce evidence which might give a different colour to these facts, the parties must proceed to proof before the questions of acquiescence & waiver & prescriptive use could be decided.—ZETLAND (EARL) v. HISLOP (1882), 7 App. Cas. 427, H. L.

2958. What constitutes breach—Licensed victuallers' business.]—In a lease for years of a messuage & premises in a public street, lessor covenanted, that, lessee, his exors., etc., should not permit or suffer any person or persons to inhabit the same, who should carry on therein certain enumerated trades or businesses, "or any other trade or business, that may be, or grow, or lead to be, offensive, or any annoyance or disturbance to" any of the other tenants of lessor, etc. Lessee granted an underlease of the premises, subject to the like covenant, to A., who opened them in the business of a licensed victualler, which was not one of the businesses enumerated in the covenant:—Held: by such acts, the covenant was not broken.—JONES v. THORNE (1823), 1 B. & C. 715; 3 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 152; 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 200; 107 E. R. 263.

to the enjoyment of the property modo et forma according to his covenant; but if he be entitled in remainder only, he must show that he has sustained some material damage by reason of the breach to entitle him to relief of this nature.

Demise of land for 999 years, at a yearly rent of £33 odd, & covenant by lessee not to carry on, or suffer to be carried on, in any building to be erected on the premises, any of several noxious or objectionable trades & employments, "or any other trade, business, or employment whatsoever," but to use the premises solely for private dwelling-houses. Lessor died, having devised the premises to one for life, & to plffs. in remainder. Deft., as sub-lessee, carried on upon the premises a school for girls. A bill for an injunction, living the tenant for life (who was not a plff.), dismissed with costs, upon the ground that, having regard to the circumstance that plffs. were merely entitled in remainder, the relief prayed was too minute, there being no case of waste, but only a possibility of the respectability of the neighbourhood being in some measure affected; & the argument from acquiescence could not apply, plffs. having no right of re-entry:—Held: obiter, in a gross case, c.g., a noxious trade, an injunction would have been granted, although plffs. were not entitled in possession.—JOHNSTONE v. HALL (1856), 2 K. & J. 414; 25 L. J. Ch. 462; 27 L. T. O. S. 230; 20 J. P. 579; 2 Jur. N. S. 780; 4 W. R. 417; 69 E. R. 844.

2960. — Dangerous trade.—["Dangerous" not included in covenant.]—Using premises for depositing large quantities of lucifer matches, whereby the premises are rendered so dangerous as to be uninsurable against fire, is not a breach of a covenant not to carry on any noisome or offensive trade, the word "dangerous" not being in the covenant.—*HICKMAN v. 2962. — Tannery.—Business to be conducted in no offensive manner.]—Specific performance of an agreement to take a lease of lands for the purpose of a tannery will not be enforced when the proposed lease contained the usual covenant against carrying on noxious trades, although defts. had represented that they were about to conduct their business in a way which could not be open to objection on that score.—REEVES v. GREENWICH TANNING CO., LTD. (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 54; 71 E. R. 380.

2963. — Hospital for surgical tuberculosis.—By a lease dated Feb. 18, 1887, H., the tenant for life in possession of a settled estate, demised to deft. T., a parcel of land, on which C. House was built, for a term of ninety-nine years, with a covenant by the lessee not to exercise or carry on upon the demised premises any noisy, noisome, or offensive trade or business, or do or suffer to be done anything which might be hazardous, or noisome or injurious, or offensive to the lessor or his property or any of his tenants. Other similar building leases with identical covenants were granted according to a building scheme applicable to part of the estate. By a deed dated Aug. 2, 1889, H. & his trustees conveyed the site of C. House, subject to the existing lease, to W. in fee, & she covenanted with H. to the intent that the burden of the covenant might run with the premises, that she, her heirs, & assigns, would not at any time thereafter permit the premises to be used for the purpose of any trade or business "or otherwise than as a private dwelling-house." On Apr. 14, 1893, W. conveyed & released the site of C. House to T. subject to the lease of Feb. 18, 1887, but to the intent that the term thereby created might be thenceforth absolutely merged in the reversion, & T. covenanted to indemnify W. against the covenants in the conveyance of 1889. In Jan. 1915, T. offered C. House to deft. association, & it was subsequently opened as a children's hospital for surgical tuberculosis. In an action by H. & others entitled to freehold & leasehold interests in houses in the vicinity, alleging breaches of covenants by reason of sights, noise, smells, & risk of infection to the neighbourhood, & asking for an injunction to restrain defts. from using the house for the purpose of a hospital so as to cause a nuisance, or from using the premises "otherwise than as a private dwelling-house" or in breach of the covenants in the lease of 1887:—Held: (1) the carrying on of a properly equipped & well managed establishment, such as the hospital was proved to be, was not per se a noisy, noisome, or offensive business; (2) on the evidence, & in particular upon the ground that the medical evidence was unanimous & unshaken to the effect that the hospital was not a source of danger to the neighbourhood & there was no risk of infection, the action failed as to the alleged breaches of the covenant in the lease of 1887, & also as to the alleged nuisance at common law; but (3) the covenant by W. in the conveyance of 1889 could not be construed as becoming effective only when the leasehold building scheme came to an end on the determination of the leases, nor could any qualification be engrafted on the declaration of merger in the deed of 1893, & therefore from that date onwards T. must be held bound by covenant enforceable by H. & his assigns not to use C. House otherwise than as a private dwelling-house. In the result, an injunction would be granted in the terms of the covenant in the conveyance of 1889, but the operation of it would be suspended for six months.—*FROST v. KING EDWARD VII. A. Nuisance.

See, generally, NUISANCE.

2967. What constitutes breach—Nuisance committed on adjoining land.]—Where there was a covenant by several allottees of land not to commit a nuisance on the allotted land:—Held: not to be a fraud on the covenant to commit a nuisance on land immediately adjoining.—CLEEVE v. MAHANY (1861), 25 J. P. 819; 9 W. R. 882.

2968. —Hospital.]—The lease of a dwelling-house at Old Brompton contained a covenant by the lessee not to use the house for certain specified trades, or any other noisome, obnoxious, or offensive trade or business, & not to do, or suffer to be done, anything upon the premises which should, or might be, or grow to the annoyance, nuisance, grievance, or damage of the lessor, his heirs & assigns, or the inhabitants of the neighbouring or adjoining houses. The lessee established a hospital at the house for treatment of diseases of the throat, nose, ear, skin, eye, fistula, & other diseases of the rectum. The lessor & two of his tenants brought an action against the lessee for an injunction restraining the lessee from using the house as a hospital in breach of the covenant contained in the lease. The ct. granted the injunction:—Held: the question depended on the construction of the latter part of the covenant; the word “annoyance” had a wider meaning than “nuisance,” & this hospital was an annoyance to the lessor & the inhabitants of the neighbouring or adjoining houses within the covenant, & the injunction had been properly granted.

In order to enforce such a covenant it is not necessary to show that actual damage or pecuniary loss has been sustained. It is sufficient without proving actual risk of infection that sensible people feel a reasonable apprehension of risk & interference with the pleasurable enjoyment of their houses for ordinary purposes as distinguished from a more fanciful feeling of distaste entertained by sensitive persons.—*TOD-HEATLY v. 2972. Nuisance committed by sub-lessee—How far lessee liable—Covenant not inserted in sub-lease.]—(1) A lessee of a house covenanted that she would not use or permit the premises or any part thereof to be used for any illegal or immoral purpose, & further, that no act, matter, or thing should at any time be done on the premises which might be or tend to the annoyance of the lessor or superior landlord for the time being or the lessees or occupiers of neighbouring premises. There was a condition of re-entry on breach of any of the covenants:—Held: the second part of the covenant in the original lease was not qualified by the word “permit” in the first part, but was an absolute covenant that if the act, matter, or thing specified was done by any one, there was a right of re-entry.

(2) The lessee sub-let the house, & the sub-lessee covenanted that she would not carry on or permit to be carried on any noisome, or dangerous, or offensive trade, or business, or anything that might be or cause an injury, nuisance, or annoyance to the sub-lessor or any of the neighbours. During the occupation of the sub-lessee an act was done on the premises which tended to the annoyance of the superior landlord:—Held: the original lessee could not be said to have “permitted” the act complained of simply because she had made a sub-lease without inserting therein covenants as strict as those in the original lease.—PROTHERO v. BELL (1906), 22 T. L. R. 370.

The lessee, without the lessor’s consent, erected above his boundary fence an open trellis-work screen of wood about fifty-eight feet long & twelve feet high, which interfered to some extent with the light flowing to the ground floor windows of the adjoining premises, which were held on lease from the same lessor with covenants similar to those above stated. In an action by the lessor against an assignee of the lease:—Held: under the circumstances the screen was a “building” within the covenant against building; & it was also an “annoyance” as it interfered with the pleasurable enjoyment of

On motion to restrain deft. from proceeding with this action:—Held: on a balance of convenience & inconvenience, having regard also to the fact deposed to that the greenhouse or conservatory might be removed in the course of a day, pltf. was entitled to an injunction to restrain the action.—HAIGH v. WATERMAN (1867), 16 L. T. 375.

2984. — Erection of wooden hoardings.—The erection of wooden hoardings for the purposes of advertisement fastened to the demised premises:—Held: to be a breach of a covenant not "to erect or make any other building or erection on any part of the demised premises."—*POCOCK v. 2985. Covenant must be definite—Covenant against "unseemly" buildings.—The pursuers, proprietors of a feu, raised an action against defenders, the proprietors of an adjoining feu held of the same superior, to enforce building restrictions. These restrictions were contained in a bond of servitude, by which defenders bound themselves & their successors not to erect on any part of an adjoining piece of ground "any building of an unseemly description." Pursuers alleged that defenders were about to allow the erection of unseemly buildings within the meaning of the bond of servitude:—Held: a condition against the erection of buildings of "an unseemly description" was too vague & indefinite to be valid as a permanent restraint on the use of property.—MURRAY v. DUNN, [1907] A. C. 283; 97 L. T. 112, II. L.

2987. External alterations—Construction of covenant.—Premises consisting of a wharf & dock, dwelling-house, wash-house, & courtyard, were demised under a lease containing a covenant that the lessee, his exors., etc., should not erect or build any edifice or structure whatsoever on the wharf & dock, or place goods thereon above a certain height, etc., "nor do any other matter or thing of any nature or kind which might obstruct the view of the river from the White Hart public-house, or that should grow or be a nuisance or annoyance to the occupier thereof," nor carry on a certain trade thereon, "nor make any external alteration whatsoever in the said premises, nor any internal alterations in the said dwelling-house that may lessen the value thereof, without the consent in writing of the lessor for that purpose;" with a proviso for re-entry for a breach:—Held: (1) this covenant absolutely prohibited all external alteration in any part of the demised premises, & the qualification as to lessening "the value thereof" applied only to internal alterations in the dwelling-house; (2) mere standing by & seeing the lessee making alterations which are in breach of his covenant, does not operate as a waiver on the part of the lessor.—PERRY v. DAVIS (1858), 3 C. B. N. S. 769; 140 E. R. 945.

2988. — ———.]—The lease of a shop occupied by a jeweller & watchmaker contained a covenant by the lessee that he would not make or suffer to be made any alteration to the demised premises without the previous written consent of the lessor:—Held: some limitation must be placed on the words of the covenant, & the erection of a large clock, affixed without the consent of the lessor to the exterior of the wall of the house by means of bolts driven into it, was not a breach of the covenant, & consequently a mandatory injunction to compel the removal of the clock ought not to be granted.

In my opinion the words "alteration to the said premises" apply only to alterations which would affect the form or structure of the premises (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).

I think the exception ought not to be limited to such alterations as are absolutely essential to carrying on the business, by which I mean alterations without which the business could not be carried on, but it ought to extend to all things fixed to the premises & convenient for the carrying on the business in a reasonable, ordinary, & proper way (STIRLING, L.J.).—BICKMORE v. DIMMER, [1903] 1 Ch. 158; 72 L. J. Ch. 96; 88 L. T. 78; 51 W. R. 180; 19 T. L. R. 96; 47 Sol. Jo. 129, C. A.

2990. ——— Alteration in fabric.]—In a lease dated Nov. 12, 1889, the lessee covenanted that he would not make or permit to be made any alterations in the elevation of the buildings or in the architectural decoration thereof. An assignee of the lease for the residue of the term of eighty years erected a structure consisting of a framework of light bars to which letters made of wood & fitted with electric lamps were fixed & used for advertising brands of whisky, ginger ale, & Bovril. The frame was hung from the upper part of the premises by steel bands fastened to the ornamental stonework & supported by struts screwed into the woodwork of the windows, & could be removed in a few hours without injury to the fabric. The lessors said that this was a breach of the covenant:—Held: the words of the covenant referred to an alteration in the fabric, & not to an alteration in appearance caused by temporary advertisements & frameworks which could be removed at any time, leaving the structure the same as before, & there had been no breach of covenant.—JOSEPH v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (1914), 111 L. T. 276; 30 T. L. R. 508; sub nom. Re LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL & WEIR'S LEASE, JOSEPH v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, 58 Sol. Jo. 579.

2993. Alteration in external appearance—What constitutes breach—Letting wall to bill-posting company—Wall covered with advertisements.]—Pltfs. granted a lease of a house to deft. for twenty-one years, deft. covenanting (1) to keep the premises in good & substantial repair & condition; (2) not to make any alteration in the external appearance of the buildings; (3) not to do or suffer to be done any act or thing which might be or grow to the annoyance, damage, or disturbance of the lessors or the neighbourhood; (4) not to carry on upon any part of the premises any other business than that of a tailor; (5) not to assign or part with the possession of the premises or any part thereof. Pltfs. held the house under a lease for ninety years from the vicar of the parish, which contained similar covenants. The house adjoined the churchyard, & deft. let the wall of the house which faced the principal entrance to the church to a bill-posting company, who covered the wall with advertisements. The effect of this was to injure the wall, & there was evidence that it was an annoyance to the vicar of the church & members of the congregation. Pltfs. claimed an injunction to restrain deft. from allowing the wall to be used as a bill-posting station:—Held: there had been a breach of covenants (1), (2), & (3), & perhaps of covenants (4) & (5), & pltf. was entitled to an injunction.—HEARD v. STUART (1907), 24 T. L. R. 104.

2994. ——— Installation of electric light advertisement—On iron brackets fixed in stonework.]—Pltfs. were successors in title of the original lessors & deft. was a successor in title of the original lessee under a lease dated Mar. 6, 1880, by which premises were let for a term of eighty years at the yearly rent of £350. The lease contained a covenant not without the consent of the lessors, their successors & assigns to "cut or maim any of the principal walls or timbers of the building . . . or commit or permit any waste or damage to the said building or to the floors or timbers thereof or make or permit to be made any alteration in the elevation of the building or in the architectural decoration thereof. . . ." Deft. had installed, without pltf.'s consent, on the facade of the building an electric light advertisement set in a large iron framework round the whole frontage of the building. The framework was bolted to & supported by twelve T irons & eleven iron brackets, all of which were cemented into holes cut in the stonework of the wall of the building. Twenty-three holes had been cut for this purpose, each hole being about 2½ inches square & 6 inches deep. The advertisement was let for advertising a make of gin, & deft. received payments for its display. The advertisement had no connection with any business carried on by deft. or his under tenants on the premises:—Held the fixing of the T irons & iron brackets in the stonework in this manner was a breach of the covenant in the lease & pltfs. were entitled to a mandatory order for their removal.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HUTTER, [1925] Ch. 626.

2995. Alteration with consent—Consent not to be unreasonably withheld—Building in gardens in square.]—A lessee covenanted with his lessor not to sublet without the lessor's previous consent in writing, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld, & not "without the like consent" to make any alteration to the demised premises, which consisted of the gardens in the centre of a London square. The lessee subsequently proposed to erect a building in the said square, to which the lessor refused his consent:—Held: the lessor was precluded from withholding his consent unreasonably to any proposed alteration by the lessee, but in the circumstances his consent to the proposed alteration was reasonably withheld.—*CARTWRIGHT v. to the comrs. S. afterwards granted to resp. a lease of one of the houses containing a restrictive covenant of the same nature & a block plan of the houses. During the negotiations for the lease statements were made by S.'s solrs. to resp. whereby he became aware that similar restrictive covenants were contained in all the leases granted by S. of houses in that block & also became aware of the terms of the conveyances of resp.'s house from the comrs. to S.:—Held: although the statements made to resp. did not amount to a collateral contract with him as to the future management of the estate, resp. was from the nature of the transaction entitled to an injunction restraining S. from authorising any of the other houses in the block to be used for the purpose of trade.—*SPICER v. 2998. — What amounts to breach—Breach by lessee of neighbouring premises—Let under covenant not to trade without lessor's licence.—B. demised an eating house for a term of twenty-one years, & covenanted that he would not during the term let any house in the same street for the purpose of carrying on the business of an eating house, provided always that the covenant should be binding only on B., & not on his heirs, exors., administrators, or assigns. Subsequently B. let the adjoining house for twenty-one years to another person, who covenanted with him not to carry on there any trade or business without B.'s licence. The first lease was subsequently assigned to pltf., & the second to G. Pltf. then brought an action against B. & G. to restrain G. from carrying on the trade of an eating house on the premises comprised in the second lease, & to restrain B. from permitting him to do so:—Held: B.'s covenant was not broken by G.'s carrying on the business of an eating house, & pltf. had no equity to restrain G. from doing so.—KEMP v. BIRD (1877), 5 Ch. D. 974; 46 L. J. Ch. 828; 37 L. T. 53; 42 J. P. 36; 25 W. R. 838, C. A.

3000. — Let for purposes of another specified trade.—Deft. W., the owner of a row of houses, let No. 3 to H. as a shop for carrying on a specified business. The lessee covenanted to use the premises for that business only, & the lessor covenanted not to let any of the other houses for the purpose of the same business. Pltf. was the assignee of H.'s lease, continuing the business. Afterwards W. let No. 1 to deft. B., taking a covenant from B. to use the premises only for the purposes of another specified business. Deft. B. sold various articles which, as the ct. found, were comprised in pltf.'s business:—Held: W. had broken no covenant of his own, & was not bound to sue B. for the breach of his covenant with W.

at the request of pltf., who was neither covenantee nor assignee of B.'s covenant; & pltf., therefore, could sue neither W. nor B.—ASHBY v. WILSON, [1900] 1 Ch. 66; 69 L. J. Ch. 47; 81 L. T. 480; 48 W. R. 105; 44 Sol. Jo. 43.

3001. — Pltfs. agreed to take from defts. certain shops in an exhibition, it being a term of the agreement that no shops adjoining those taken by pltfs. should be let for the sale of souvenirs. Defts. let one of the adjoining shops to tobacconists for the sale of tobacconists' & general fancy goods, & others to a tailor, to a perfumer, & to an embroiderer for the sale of neckties & handkerchiefs. In an action for breach of the covenant in the agreement pltfs. complained that articles properly described as souvenirs were being sold in these adjoining shops:—Held*: as the adjoining shops were let for a purpose which would not ordinarily include the sale of souvenirs the action failed.—*L. 3002. — Sale of prohibited articles incident to tenant's business.—By a lease of a house, No. 10, the lessors covenanted not to permit or suffer to be carried on at 11 or 12 the business of ladies' outfitters, nor give their consent to its being carried on at No. 9. Afterwards the assigns of the lessors demised No. 9 to defts., who covenanted not to carry on there the business of ladies' underclothing, except vests & stockings. Defts. when they took their lease had notice of the covenant in the lease of No. 10. The lessee of No. 10 sued for an injunction to restrain defts. from carrying on at No. 9 the business of ladies' outfitters. All that was proved was, that defts., who were hosiers, sold four classes of articles, the sale of which was an essential part of the business of ladies' outfitters, but which were also commonly sold by hosiers:—Held: assuming the lessees of No. 9 to be under an obligation which pltf. could enforce against them by action, not to carry on the business of ladies' outfitters, the action must be dismissed, on the ground that they were not shown to have done so, for that the bona fide sale by hosiers, along with numerous other articles, of certain articles of hosiery, the sale of which was an essential & important part, but not nearly the whole, of ladies' outfitters, was no breach of the obligation, there being no covenant that the lessees of No. 9 would not carry on any part of the business of ladies' outfitters:—Qu.: whether the lessees of No. 9 were under any obligation not to carry on the business of ladies' outfitters on which the lessee of No. 10 could sue them.—*STUART v. 3007. ———. ———.]—Deft., being the owner of certain house property, which included five shops, numbered 2 to 6, L. Parade, let to plffs. the shop No. 4, L. Parade for twenty-one years, the lessor covenanting that he would not at any time during the continuance of the lease let "any of the adjoining shops belonging to me on the L. Estate" for the purpose of the businesses of upholsterers, cabinet makers, furniture dealers, or french polishers. Subsequently, during the continuance of the lease, deft. let to a tenant the shop No. 6, L. Parade for a term of twenty-one years for the purpose of carrying on the business (inter alia) of a cabinet maker:—Held: the word "adjoining" was not confined to the two shops physically in contact with the demised shop, but that it extended to No. 6, & there had therefore been a breach of deft.'s covenant in respect of which plffs. were entitled to recover damages.—CAVE v. HORSELL, [1912] 3 K. B. 533; 81 L. J. K. B. 981; 107 L. T. 186; 28 T. L. R. 543, C. A.

3008. ———. ———.]—Defts. in a lease of premises to plffs. covenanted not to let the "adjoining" premises as a motor garage & office without giving plffs. the first refusal. Defts. having let premises which were near to, but not next door or physically adjoining, those let to plffs. as a lock up show room for motor cars without giving plffs. the first refusal, plffs. claimed an injunction:—Held: (1) on the evidence, the premises were not being used as a motor garage; (2) the premises were not "adjoining" those let to plffs., & therefore on both grounds plffs. were not entitled to an injunction.—DERBY MOTOR CAB CO. v. CROMPTON & EVANS UNION BANK (1913), 29 T. L. R. 673; 57 Sol. Jo. 701.

3009. ———. Remedy for breach—Injunction.]—Where defts., owners of a public building, have contracted with plff., that he, renting a stall from them, shall have the exclusive right to exhibit & sell certain specified classes of goods, an injunction will lie against defts. for permitting the exhibition & sale by other renters of stalls within the building of goods so specified.—ALTMAN v. ROYAL AQUARIUM SOCIETY (1876), 3 Ch. D. 228.

3010. ———. ———.]—T., the landlord of an arcade containing shops, agreed in writing, binding himself & his "assigns," to grant to B., a "fine art dealer," a lease of one of the shops for a term of twenty-one years, determinable on notice at the end of the seventh or fourteenth year; the lease to contain a covenant by the lessee not to carry on upon the premises any other trade or business than such as was therein specified, including that of an "artistic & heraldic stationer"; & also a covenant by the landlord "not to let any other portion of the arcade for the trade or business hereinbefore mentioned to be carried on by the tenant." B. thereupon entered into possession of the shop & carried on his specified trade or business there. Subsequently T. let a stall forming part of another shop in the arcade to G., a "bookseller & stationer," on a tenancy determinable on three months' notice, & it was agreed that the tenant should not carry on any business other than that of a librarian, newsagent, bookseller, or stationer. G. then proceeded to sell at his stall certain articles commonly included in a business such as that described in his agreement, but which were also included in a business such as that described in B.'s agreement. G. had notice of B.'s agreement. In an action by B. against T. & G. for an injunction to restrain T. from "letting" & G. from "using" the stall or any other portion of the arcade for any of the purposes of the business described in B.'s agreement:—Held: (1) T. had committed a breach of his covenant with B. "not to let" for which he was liable in damages, & although, in the circumstances, an immediate injunction against T. was not necessary, B. might apply for an injunction in the event of any future breach; but (2) as the covenant restrained "letting" only & not "using," B. had no remedy against G. either by injunction or damages.

A restrictive covenant as to the letting or user of property will be construed strictly, & not so as to create a wider obligation than is imported by the actual words.—BRIGG v. THORNTON, [1904] 1 Ch. 386; 73 L. J. Ch. 301; 90 L. T. 327; 52 W. R. 276, C. A.

In a lease by H. to plff. co., the lessor covenanted that he, his heirs, exors., administrators, & assigns, would not carry on, or permit to be carried on by others, in certain named shops the business of a tailor; H. subsequently demised one of the shops to B. for a tailoring business. In an action by plff. co. against H. & B. for an injunction to restrain H. from permitting, & B. from carrying on, this business:—Held: on the construction of the covenant, the mention of assigns, without mentioning lessees, afforded no ground, standing alone, for holding that the covenant was not binding upon B.; though "lessees" were not mentioned eo nomine, the words of the covenant were sufficient to bind B. not to carry on the particular business referred to, & an injunction ought to be granted.—HOLLOWAY BROTHERS, LTD. v. HILL, [1902] 2 Ch. 612; 71 L. J. Ch. 818; 87 L. T. 201; 18 T. L. R. 745; 46 Sol. Jo. 665.

3014. Not to "permit or suffer" specified building—What amounts to breach—Breach by lessee of neighbouring premises—Without sanction of lessor.]—The D. Harbour board were the owners of some property adjoining a house of which they were also the lessors. X. was the assignee of the lease of the house. The lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessors that they "shall not nor will at any time or times during the continuance of the term hereby granted, demise, or lease all or any part of the ground between C. Crescent, aforesaid, & the sea for the erection of any building or buildings whatsoever other than public baths with or without reading rooms or libraries, nor permit or suffer any such buildings or any part of such buildings to be thereon erected which shall be of a greater height than 15 ft. 7 in. above the ground floor of the centre houses in C. Crescent aforesaid." Some years after the date of the lease the board let the adjoining property to the D. corpn. The agreement between the board & the corpn. contained a provision that the corpn. should keep in repair a bandstand on the property. This bandstand was subsequently removed by the corpn., & a new bandstand exceeding 15 ft. 7 in. in height was erected by them in its place. Pltf. brought this action against the corpn. & the board for an injunction for the removal of the bandstand & for damages:—Held: the operation of the covenant only extended to buildings for the erection of which the board was entitled to demise or let the land, & there was no covenant by the board not to permit any building whatever to be erected in excess of the specified height; no evidence was adduced of any arrangement between the board & the corpn.; the board could not have authorised the corpn. to erect a bandstand, though they could have erected one themselves; & pltf. had not succeeded in proving that there had been a breach of the covenant by the board.—PALLISER v. DOVER CORPN. (1914), 110 L. T. 619; 58 Sol. Jo. 379; 78 J. P. Jo. 123.

3015. Who may sue—Original lessor—Having parted with whole interest.—S., an owner in fee simple of land, demised it for ninety-nine years to a lessee, who assigned it with the lessor's consent, the assignee covenanting with the lessor, "his heirs & assigns as owner for the time being of land forming part of" the E. estate that he the assignee, his exors., administrators, & assigns, would not "for the space of ten years from the date thereof use or allow to be used the said premises for any trade or business other than that of a poulterer & cheesemonger." The assignee's extrix. & universal legatee agreed to let the premises for three years to a tenant who agreed to use them as a cheesemonger's & poulterer's shop only. The tenant assigned his interest to B., who signed a memorandum indorsed on the agreement, agreeing to perform the covenants contained therein. He subsequently used the premises as a grocer's shop, & for the sale of wines & spirits under an off-license. The shop in question formed one of a row of shops which had belonged to S., & each of which was limited by covenant to a particular trade, & S. on selling some of the other shops had covenanted with the purchasers that the shop now occupied by B. should not be used for the purpose for which B. was now using it. S. had subsequently disposed of all his interest in the E. estate. He now brought an action against B. for an injunction to restrain him from using the shop except as a cheesemonger's & poulterer's. Deft. contended that S. having parted with all his interest in the estate could not enforce the covenant:—Held: though pltf. had parted with his interest in the estate he had still an interest in enforcing the covenant previously entered into with him as owner, inasmuch as he had, by his subsequent covenants to the same effect, made himself liable to be sued by the purchasers of the other shops in case the covenant should be infringed, & deft. having taken the premises with notice of the title of which the restrictive covenant formed part, pltf. was accordingly entitled to the injunction he asked for.—SPENCER v. BAILEY (1893), 60 L. T. 179; 9 T. L. R. 364.

3016. Exhibition of plan of property at time of demise—Whether engagement that property shall continue as then shown.—(1) A treaty was entered into with the Comrs. of Woods & Forests for the lease of a piece of ground in the line of an intended new street, & which the Comrs. were empowered by Act of Parliament to demise. Upon the treaty, a Parliamentary plan was shown to the lessee, on which the new street was distinguished by a line, & the space between the piece of ground demised & the opposite houses, being 100 feet in width, was left open. A lease was executed, & in it the ground demised was described as being on the north side of a new street then forming; but no mention was made of the Parliamentary plan. The Comrs. of Woods & Forests, & the Comrs. of Paving for the parish, consented to the erection of a pedestal & statue in this open space, leaving, however, between such erection & the ground demised, a space of equal width with the rest of the new street:—Held: the lessee was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the proposed erection.

(2) The mere exhibition by a lessor of a plan of his property, at the time of demising part of it, does not amount to an engagement that the rest of the property so exhibited shall continue in the same state as then represented.—*SQUIRE v. By indorsement made on the lease before execution, it was agreed that it should be lawful for the lessor to let any part of the within demised premises for the purpose of making bricks or tiles, he paying the lessee £3 for every acre which he should so let; & further, that it should be lawful for the lessee to break up & dig for gravel any part of the within demised premises, he covenanting to pay to the lessor £20 for every acre he should break up & dig at or before the expiration of the time, & to make good the same:—Held: the lessee was not entitled to dig for gravel in the two acres of garden ground mentioned in the lease, without making them good.—*FLINT v. 3026. Not to hang signs outside demised premises—"Wooden spectacles."]—In a lease the lessee covenanted not to fix or hang any sign or signs whatsoever by iron or other fastenings to, out of, or from the said premises thereby demised:—Held: (1) wooden spectacles were "signs" within the meaning of the covenant; (2) semble: also, in such a case receipt of rent after breach of the covenant would amount to such an inducement to the lessee to believe that the condition would not be enforced, as that no ejectment would lie till after notice to the lessee.—ELAND v. SUFFEL (1868), 18 L. T. 371, N. P.

3027. Not to permit sale by auction on premises—Sale by grantor of bill of sale.]—Pltf. demised a house by lease, creating a forfeiture upon breach of lessee's covenants, one of which was not to permit a sale by auction on the premises; another was to pay rent within a certain time. The lessee executed a bill of sale of his goods, by which he agreed that in case of default the mtgees. of the goods might sell & dispose of the goods on or at the house or premises, or remove the goods & sell the same whenever & wheresoever they should think proper, by private contract or public auction. The lessee then underlet the premises by way of mtge. to deft. The lessee then assigned all his estate & effects to trustees under Bkpcy. Act, 1861 (c. 134). Afterwards the grantee of the bill of sale sold the goods assigned to him by public auction on the premises, without the lessee's knowledge, & without the assent of deft., who was mtgee. Pltf. claimed possession, by the particulars ordered in this ejectment, on the grounds of forfeiture by breach of covenant not to permit a sale by auction:—Held: these facts constituted a forfeiture of the lease by breach of the covenant not to permit a sale by auction on the premises.—*TOLEMAN v. 3028. Not to do any dangerous act—Keepin steam engine on premises—Refusal by insurance company to re-insure.]—Pltf. desired to restrain deft. from using & keeping on pltf.'s premises now occupied by deft., a steam engine. Deft. had covenanted not to do any act dangerous to his co-tenants, or to the landlord. On account of the engine, the fire office, where pltf. was insured, refused to continue the insurance, & pltf. was under a covenant with his superior landlord to insure. In deft.'s covenant to repair & keep safe, there is an exception of accidental fire. This action was commenced in the hope that the engine would be removed at once, for since it worked night & day it was a nuisance to the co-tenants, as well as an actual damage to pltf. On an ex p. application in an action of ejectment for an injunction against the use of a steam engine on the premises until the trial of the action, an injunction was granted, pltf. undertaking to abide by whatever order the ct. might make as to any damages suffered by deft.—TOZER v. WALFORD (1875), Bitt. Prac. Cas. 68; 1 Char. Cham. Cas. 16.

3029. Not to affix outward mark of business—Inscribed blinds—& brass plate.]—Pltf., having agreed for a lease of premises for a term of years, agreed to lease a part of such premises to deft. D., such lease to D. to contain the same covenants as should be contained in pltf.'s own lease, when granted. Pltf.'s lease, when granted, contained a covenant "not to affix or permit any outward mark or show of business to be affixed to the premises." Deft. D. sub-leased to deft. B. & the latter, with D.'s licence, so far as he was able to give the same, carried on a tailor's business on the premises, & erected a brass plate on the outside railing of the premises, & also put up blinds inside the window, having her trade name thereon:—Held: a breach of the covenant had been committed, & an injunction must be granted against deft. D. as well as against deft. B. to restrain the continuance of the breach.—EVANS v. DAVIS (1878), 10 Ch. D. 747; 48 L. J. Ch. 223; 39 L. T. 391; 27 W. R. 285.

3031. Not to expose goods for sale outside premises.]—Pltf. & defts. held under the same superior lease. One of the covenants of the lease was that nothing should be hung, placed or exposed for sale or otherwise outside the premises. Pltf. brought an action for damages & injunction for breach thereof, complaining that defts. greatly interfered with the comfort of the people coming to his shop. The jury found that defts. had been guilty of a breach of the covenant in question, & also that there was such an unreasonable use of the highway as to amount to a public nuisance, & pltf. had in consequence sustained damage, but to what amount they were unable to say. During the eighteen years for which the nuisance had existed, pltf. had only once complained to defts. about it. Pltf. upon the findings of the jury asked for an injunction:—Held: there was such acquiescence on the part of pltf. in the nuisance that an injunction could not be granted.—ROGERS v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. CO. (1889), 53 J. P. 484; 5 T. L. R. 264, N. P.

3032. Not to use premises for illegal purpose—Contemplated breach.—LILLEY v. BENNETT (1888), 5 T. L. R. 156.

3033. — Gaming.—The tenant of certain premises agreed not to permit "games of baccarat, hazard, or roulette" to be played thereon, & so to carry on the club for the purpose for which the premises were let "as not to contravene any laws of the land for the time being in force":—Held: both "baccarat chemin de fer," & "baccarat banque" were absolutely prohibited by the agreement.—FAIRLOUGH v. WHITMORE (1895), 64 L. J. Ch. 386; 72 L. T. 354; 43 W. R. 421; 11 T. L. R. 288; 13 R. 402; sub nom. FAIRLOUGH v. BROADBENT, 39 Sol. Jo. 332.

3034. Not to do act to impose heavier insurance burden on premises—Selling lamps ignited by dangerous explosives.—TEAPE v. DOUSE, No. 2880, ante.

3035. — Storing highly inflammable material.—On Sept. 14, 1905, C. let premises to M., who covenanted not to underlet without C.'s consent in writing, & also not to carry on or permit upon the said premises any trade or occupation or do or suffer any other thing which might render any increased or extra premium payable for the insurance of the premises against fire, or which might make void or voidable any policy for such insurance. The premises were insured with the B.C.A. co. They were burnt down & rebuilt. On July 13, 1910, that office declined to renew the insurance. The N. Assurance inspected the premises, & found they were occupied by linen waterproofers, who manipulated highly inflammable materials & stored fifty gallons of acetone, fifty gallons of alcohol, & 1 cwt. of celluloid 35 ft. from the main building. Goods were dipped in liquid celluloid, & there was a laboratory for mixing the waterproof solution, & they refused to insure the premises. C. asked for an injunction restraining M. from permitting or suffering the waterproofing co. to carry on upon the demised premises any trade or occupation, or doing or suffering any other thing, which might render any increased or extra premium payable for the insurance of the premises against fire, or which might make void or voidable any policy for such insurance:—Held: an injunction must be granted as asked, & the immediate removal of the inflammable substance must be directed.—CHAPMAN v. MASON & LINILINE CO. (1910), 103 L. T. 390.

3036. Not to subdivide lands—Advertisement for sale in plots.—Where land was leased exclusively for agricultural purposes, with liberty to the lessee to erect the necessary buildings for residence, but not to sub-divide in order to sell or lease stands for building purposes:—Held: the lessor was entitled to treat the lease as null & void & eject the assignees thereon on its being shown that they had advertised the land for sale in acre plots, & had issued plans showing a proposed sub-division into acre plots. The breach of condition was complete without actual transfer of the plots to purchasers.—SHORT v. TURF-FONTEIN ESTATES, LTD., [1905] A. C. 584; 74 L. J. P. C. 148; 93 L. T. 57, P. C.

3037. Not to use premises for revolutionary propaganda—Lessor's right of re-entry.—Pltf., who described himself as the Plenipotentiary minister of the Russian people's Govt. in London, became the tenant of deft. under an agreement containing a covenant that pltf. would not do anything which might become a nuisance to the adjoining tenants & would not use the premises for propagandist purposes. The agreement gave deft. a right of re-entry only for non-payment of rent. Pltf. committed a breach of his covenant & also sent to British trade unions a circular inciting to revolution. Deft. thereupon re-entered & locked pltf. out. In an action for an injunction to restrain deft. from interfering with pltf.'s occupation of the premises:—Held: in the circumstances pltf. was not entitled to equitable relief, & the action must be dismissed.—LITVINOFF v. KENT (1918), 34 T. L. R. 298.

3038. To maintain prices of admission—Lease of theatre—Whether increase of prices prohibited.

—Under a covenant by the lessee of a theatre that he would at all times during the term "maintain" the prices of admission "as now charged" at the theatre, & would not reduce the same without the consent in writing of the lessor first obtained:—Held: the covenant only restricted a decrease & did not restrain an increase in the prices of admission.—Re DOTT'S LEASE, MILLER v. DOTT, [1920] 1 Ch. 281; 89 L. J. Ch. 15; 122 L. T. 93; 36 T. L. R. 52; 64 Sol. Jo. 68.

3041. Licence not acted upon—Subsequent restrictive covenant.—A corp., by agreement under their common seal, dated July 24, 1811, covenanted with E. to grant him a building lease of certain ground, for ninety-nine years, as soon as certain houses were finished thereon. E. proceeded to build the houses, & on Jan. 21, 1812, obtained a licence from the corp. to build a particular house as a baker's shop, which he proceeded with accordingly, but put in no shop front, the space left for it being boarded up. On Dec. 30, 1812, the corp., according to their agreement, granted a lease to E., containing a covenant by him, not to cut, maim, or injure any of the principal timbers

p. Licence by agent.—Def., with the consent of the agent of the owner, became assignee of the lease of an apartment, the lease of which contained a covenant that the apartment should not be used to give instruction in music & singing. At the time of the execution of the assignment deft. made it known to pltf.'s agent that she was a teacher of the pianoforte, & intended to give lessons on that instrument. The agent agreed that deft. should have permission to give lessons up to a reasonable hour:—Held: the forfeiture clause of the lease was waived.—YEATES v. GILLEN (1921), 54 N. S. R. 322; 57 D. L. R. 461.—CAN.

or walls of the demised premises, nor to convert, use, or occupy them into or for any shop, etc., without the previous consent in writing of the lessors, their successors, etc.; & also a proviso for re-entry on any breach of covenant. In 1814, the house, which had been left unfinished, was completed by E. as a private house, the space intended for the shop front being filled up with a brick wall, in which two windows were left. The house was occupied as a private dwelling till Oct. 1822, when E. took out the last-mentioned brick wall, & placing a shop window in its place commenced the business of a baker there:—Held: a breach of covenant, by which a forfeiture was incurred; & the original licence to build the house as a baker's shop had no operation as such, after the lease executed containing the above covenants.—DOE d. FOUNDLING HOSPITAL v. EVANS (1825), 4 L. J. O. S. K. B. 231.

3042. Licence after breach—Necessity for deed.]—If, to debt on bond which contained a condition that debt. should not open a shop within a certain distance of premises demised in a lease, debt. plead that he opened a shop by the licence of ptff.:—Held: such plea was bad, on general demurrer, on the ground that a licence, after breach, was not good, unless by deed.—SELLERS v. BICKFORD (1817), 8 Taunt. 31; 1 Moore, C. P. 460; 129 E. R. 293.

3043. If adjoining houses were "converted into shops"—Meaning of "converted."]—A lessee of a private house covenanted not to use it as a shop; but it was provided that if the adjoining houses were converted into shops, he might convert his to a similar use:—Held: the term "converted" did not necessarily mean a structural conversion, but if the adjoining houses were used as shops, although there was no structural conversion, the lessee might use his house also as a shop.—WILKINSON v. ROGERS (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 62; 3 New Rep. 347; 9 L. T. 696; 28 J. P. 103; 10 Jur. N. S. 162; 12 W. R. 284; 46 E. R. 298, L. J. J.

But this covenant is, that the rooms shall not be used for certain purposes. There was, therefore, a new breach of covenant every day during the time that they were so used, of which the landlord might take advantage; & the verdict which proceeded on the particular words of this covenant was right (per Cur.).—DOE d. AMBLER v. WOODBRIDGE (1829), 9 B. & C. 376; 4 Man. & Ry. K. B. 302; 7 L. J. O. S. K. B. 263; 109 E. R. 140.

The lessee, without the written consent of the lessors, underlet the premises to persons who carried on other trades, & the lessors subsequently received the rent with knowledge of the breach of covenant. The particulars & conditions of sale set forth the fact of the premises being under-leased, & provided that the production of the last receipt for rent should be conclusive evidence of the performance of the covenants or of waiver of any breaches of the same up to the completion of the purchase:—Held: the purchaser was bound to complete, notwithstanding the continuing breaches of covenant.—*LAWRIE v. 3068. Lessee of adjoining premises—Covenant enuring to such lessee's benefit—Privacy.]—A., lessee of a house, agreed with the landlord of another house which adjoined, that if the lease of the latter were renewed certain windows should be closed up. The lease was not renewed, but a new lease was granted to another lessee, previously to which A. & the landlord agreed that the windows, instead of being closed, should be treated in a particular manner, & in the lease such lessee covenanted so to treat them:—Held: upon a bill filed by A. against the subsequent lessee; the latter must be restrained from violating this covenant. The interference with the privacy of a lessee in the enjoyment of his tenement is not of a trivial nature, & the ct. will interpose its authority to protect the enjoyment.—ANDOVER (LADY) v. ROBERTSON (1855), 20 L. T. O. S. 23.

3069. ———.]—The owner of an estate granted a lease of a plot of ground to A., who covenanted that he, his exors., administrators, or assigns, would not during the term do on the premises anything which should be an annoyance to the neighbourhood or to the lessor or his tenants, or diminish the value of the adjoining property, nor build, nor allow to be built, on the ground any building or erection without first submitting the plans to the lessor & obtaining his approval. The landlord some years afterwards granted a lease of an adjoining plot to B. who entered into a similar restrictive covenant. Within twenty years A. commenced, with the approval of the lessor, to build upon his ground so as to darken the windows of B.'s house. On bill by B. to restrain A. from erecting & the lessor from approving the building objected to:—Held: B. was not entitled to relief either on the principle that the lessor could not derogate from his grant, or on the ground that the restrictive covenants in A.'s lease enured for B.'s benefit.—MASTER v. HANSARD (1876), 4 Ch. D. 718; 46 L. J. Ch. 505; 36 L. T. 535; 41 J. P. 373; 25 W. R. 570, C. A.

B. sub-leased the house to C., & by an inadvertence on the part of B., the sub-lease contained a clause permitting C. to carry on his business of a music teacher on the premises:—Held: B. was properly made a party to an action to restrain the breach of the covenant.—TRITTON v. T. granted an underlease of the house, & the underlease was assigned to deft. E. E. underlet the house to M., who opened a wild beast exhibition in it. Pltf. brought an action against E. & his undertenant, asking for an injunction to restrain the use of the house in that manner. There was no evidence that E. had consented to the use of the house, & it appeared that after complaints had been made he had requested M. to discontinue the exhibition:—Held: as against E. the action could not be maintained, he not being liable either at law or in equity for not taking active proceedings against his undertenant to prevent him from opening the exhibition.—HALL v. The lease contained a covenant by him that he would not carry on in those premises any noisy or offensive trade other than that of a pork butcher. He was also the lessee of premises No. 170, High Street, East Ham, where he carried on the business of a general butcher. By a deed of assignment I. S. sold to pltf. his leasehold interest in No. 170, & the goodwill of the business carried on there, & covenanted to use his best endeavours to promote the business & to secure to pltf. his exors., administrators, & assigns, the full advantage of his, the vendor's, connection & custom in the business, & also that he, his exors., administrators, or assigns, would not carry on or be concerned or interested in or assist any other person to carry on or be concerned or obtain any interest in the trade or business of a butcher within three miles of No. 170, High Street, East Ham, & also that he, his exors., administrators, or assigns, would not deal in fresh meat other than pork at No. 137, High Street. Subsequently I. S. determined to give up the business which he was carrying on at No. 137 & his son, deft. G. S., who was also a butcher, & who was aware of the last mentioned restrictive covenant contained in the deed of assignment, was minded to carry it on. I. S. surrendered his lease of No. 137 to the landlord, who granted a new lease to G. S., by the terms of which G. S. was entitled, so far as the landlord was concerned, to carry on in those premises the business of a general butcher. G. S. accordingly commenced to carry on at No. 137 the business of a general butcher. Pltf. claimed damages against I. S. for breach of the covenants in the deed of assignment, & an injunction against G. S. to restrain him from dealing in fresh meat other than pork at No. 137. The ct. held that pltf. was entitled to damages against I. S. for breach of covenant & to an injunction against G. S. as claimed. On an appeal by G. S.:—Held: the injunction must be set aside, on the ground that the landlord had no actual notice of the restrictive covenant, & there was nothing to justify the inference that he had constructive notice, & G. S. being therefore in the position of a purchaser with notice from a previous purchaser without notice, was entitled to use the premises free from any restraint by reason of the restrictive covenant.—WILKES v. SPOONER, [1911] 2 K. B. 473; 80 L. J. K. B. 1107; 104 L. T. 911; 27 T. L. R. 426; 55 Sol. Jo. 479, C. A.

3077. Underlessee.—After purchase of immediate reversion.—A., being possessed of a piece of land for a term of ninety-nine years, laid it out in plots, & underleased one plot to deft. for the residue of the term, less three days, deft. covenanting not to build more than 20 ft. in height on that side of his plot which adjoined a narrow passage. A. underleased another plot, which abutted on the other side of the passage, to pltf. On A.'s death, the estate was sold under conditions which provided that the purchaser of the largest lot in value should take an assignment of the whole, & grant fresh underleases to the various underlessees, for the residue of the term of ninety-nine years, less two days. Deft. purchased his own plot, & pltf. purchased their plot, which was the largest in value. Pltf. took an assignment of the whole, & granted a fresh underlease to deft. of his lot for the residue of the term less two days, at an apportioned ground rent:—Held: though deft.'s original underlease was merged at law, he was still bound in equity to observe his building covenant; & pltf. could obtain an injunction to restrain him from infringing it.—BIRMINGHAM JOINT STOCK CO. v. LEA (1877), 36 L. T. 843.

3078. Occupier.—With notice of covenant.—The owners of the freehold reversion in a house sued A. & his son B. to restrain them from using the house in such a way as to break a restrictive covenant contained in a lease of it granted by pltf.' predecessor in title. The house was vested in B. for a term under an underlease which had been assigned to him. It was not shown that A. had any estate legal or equitable in the house, but there was evidence to show that he was in substance managing the business carried on there in which B. took part. The judge came to the conclusion that B. was a trustee of the underlease for A., & granted an injunction against both of them. A. appealed, alleging that he had no estate or interest in the house, & that an injunction could not be granted against him:—Held: the evidence showed A. to be in joint or sole occupation of the house & to be managing the business in it with notice of the covenants, & even if he was nothing more than a mere occupier he was liable to an injunction to restrain him from using the house in a way forbidden by the restrictive covenants.—MANDER v. FALCKE, [1891] 2 Ch. 554; 65 L. T. 203, C. A.

3079. ————]—A builder, L., who had entered into an agreement with a landlord by which a lease of certain property was to be granted him on the completion of certain buildings thereon, covenanted with B., the owner of adjoining land, that the windows in the said buildings facing B.'s land should be obscured & fixed. A block of flats was erected, & a lease granted to L., by whom it was subsequently mortgaged & the equity of redemption released. Deft. became tenant of one of the flats & opened one of the fixed windows:—Held: the covenant was a restrictive covenant, binding on the leasehold interest, of which deft. had constructive notice, & could be enforced by injunction.

A restrictive covenant is one that restricts the enjoyment of land. When a person in possession of land binds himself to maintain a building, or part thereof, in a certain condition he enters into an obligation restrictive of his full enjoyment of the land. It is not necessary that there should be an express negative covenant; a negative may be implied (WARRINGTON, J.).—ABBAY v. GUTTERES (1911), 55 Sol. Jo. 364.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

3080. Duty of landlord as to disclosure.]—There is no implied duty in the owner of a house which is in a ruinous & unsafe condition, to inform a proposed tenant that it is unfit for habitation; & no action will lie against him for an omission to do so, in the absence of express warranty, or active deceit.—KEATES v. CADOGAN (EARL) (1851), 10 C. B. 591; 20 L. J. C. P. 76; 16 L. T. O. S. 307; 15 Jur. 428; 138 E. R. 234.

3081. Warranty & representation distinguished.]—Pltf. & deft. negotiated for the lease of a house by the latter to the former. The terms were arranged, but pltf. refused to hand over the counterpart that he had signed unless he received an assurance that the drains were in order. Deft. verbally represented that they were in good order, & the counterpart was thereupon handed to him. The lease contained no reference to drains. The drains were not in good order, & an action was brought to recover damages for breach of warranty:—Held: the representation made by deft. as to the drains being in good order was a warranty which was collateral to the lease, & for breach of which an action was maintainable.

What constitutes a warranty in law, or a mere representation? To create a warranty no special form of words is necessary. It must be a collateral undertaking forming part of the contract by agreement of the parties express or implied & must be given during the course of the dealing which leads to the bargain & should then enter into the bargain as part of it. . . . "An affirmation at the time of sale is a warranty provided it appear on evidence to have been so intended." In determining whether it was so intended, a decisive test is whether the vendor assumes to assert a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states an opinion or judgment upon a matter of which the vendor has no special knowledge, & on which the buyer may be expected also to have an opinion & to exercise his judgment. In the former case it is a warranty, in the latter not. . . . That the above constitutes a warranty upon the sale of a chattel cannot be doubted, & why not . . . upon the granting & taking of a lease if it be collateral? I know of no authority which shows, nor do I see any principle upon which it should be held that, the like conditions existing, such an affirmation does not constitute a warranty upon, as in this case, the granting of a lease (A. L. SMITH, M.R.).—DE LASSALLE v. GUILDFORD, [1901] 2 K. B. 215; 70 L. J. K. B. 533; 84 L. T. 549; 49 W. R. 467; 17 T. L. R. 384, C. A.

3082. Whether actionable—If misrepresentation innocent.]—Pltf. sued deft. for damages for falsely representing that the sanitary arrangements of a house let by him to pltf. were perfect. Shortly after pltf. took possession of the house his wife was taken ill of blood poisoning from sewer gas & died. At the trial pltf. proved a loss of £850 a year which his wife was entitled to, & he recovered £2,228 damages. The Div. Ct. set aside this verdict, & entered judgment for deft. on the ground that there was no evidence that the drainage was defective when the representations were made, & at any rate, no evidence that if the drainage were defective deft. knew of it or made the representations recklessly; & further, that no damages could be recovered for the death of the wife:—Held: without expressing any opinion as to the question of damages arising from the death of the wife, there was no evidence of false or reckless statements, & the appeal must be dismissed.—SAUNDERS v. PAWLEY (1886), 2 T. L. R. 590, C. A.

The house in question being unfurnished there was no implied contract by the landlord that it was fit for habitation, & deft. therefore could only recover on his counterclaim by showing that he was induced to take the house by representations of the landlord, which were either false to his knowledge at the time or made recklessly without any care whether they were true or false (GRANTHAM, J.).—*BARTHAM v. Pltf. alleged that previous to the execution of the lease deft. said he would make the drainage & water-closet perfect in every way, & subsequently after certain alterations had been made, deft. said that the water-closet was as sound as could be & in perfect order. The lease, which was executed after these representations, was silent as to the state of the drainage & water-closet, but pltf. said he was induced by these representations to take the lease. In an action to recover damages in respect of an illness alleged to have been caused by the defective state of the water-closet:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, as, assuming the representations to have been made they did not amount to an agreement, but were at most a misrepresentation for which in the absence of fraud no action would lie.

Held: the lease was void ab initio.—HICKEY v. SCIUTTO (1903), 10 B. C. R. 187.—CAN.

Plea, that pltf. caused & procured deft. to enter into the agreement by means of fraud, covin, & misrepresentation of pltf., & others in collusion with him; on which issue was joined. It appeared at the trial, that pltf. had employed one C. to let the house in question, & that deft. being in treaty with C. for taking it, asked him "if there was any objection to the house," to which he answered that there was not; & deft. entered into & signed the agreement, but afterwards discovered that the adjoining house was a brothel, & on that ground declined to fulfil the contract. It appeared that pltf. knew of the existence of the brothel before, but C. the agent did not:—Held: it was not sufficient to support the plea, that the representation turned out to be untrue, but for that purpose it ought to have been proved to have been fraudulently made; as the representation was not embodied in the contract, the contract should not be affected by it, unless it were a fraudulent representation; & the knowledge of pltf. of the existence of the nuisance, & the representation of the agent that it did not exist, were not enough to constitute fraud, so as to support the plea.—CORNFOT v. Deft. denied that any such representations were made. The premises proved to be in an insanitary condition & in a bad state of repair:—Held: assuming innocent misrepresentations were made which entitled pltfs. to rescission of their contract, they could not claim to be indemnified by way of compensation for injuries sustained by the insanitary condition of the premises & occasioned by their entering into the contract. Such compensation is in reality damages pure & simple, & is not the proper consequence of rescinding the contract.—WHITTINGTON v. SEALE-HAYNE (1900), 82 L. T. 49; 18 T. L. R. 181; 44 Sol. Jo. 229.

An assurance that a certain state of things existed might or might not have been intended & accepted as a promise or warranty, or as a single assurance. The statement that a house was well built was one of a very general character, & was in its nature more like the expression of an opinion than an allegation of fact. . . . 3122. —.]—Every person who lets a house must be taken to let it on an implied condition that it is habitable, & unincumbered with any serious nuisance.

Where a tenant entered on the occupation of a furnished house, under an agreement to pay a weekly rental of eight guineas, for five weeks, & at the expiration of one week left the house on account of its being infested with bugs. In an action for use & occupation to recover the balance of five weeks' rental:—Held: the nuisance was a defence to the action, & evidence of it admissible under the general issue.—SMITH v. 3125. —.]—Upon the letting of a furnished house there is an implied warranty in the nature of a condition that the demised premises shall be reasonably fit for habitation at the date fixed for the commencement of the tenancy. A house in which a person has recently been suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis does not comply with such warranty, & the tenant is therefore entitled to repudiate the contract of tenancy on the ground that the premises are not reasonably safe for human occupation.—COLLINS v. HOPKINS, [1923] 2 K. B. 617; 92 L. J. K. B. 820; 130 L. T. 21; 39 T. L. R. 616; 21 L. G. R. 773.

3126. Application of rule—Partly furnished house let on five years' agreement.—An agreement was entered into between C. & P. for the lease of a partly furnished house, together with a garden & a few acres of ground, for a term of five years. P. alleged that a false representation had been made by C. as to the sufficiency of the water supply, & on the water supply failing, P. alleged that the house was uninhabitable, & refused to be bound by the agreement. There was evidence that the pipes had become stopped up when the house was in the occupation of P.:—Held: upon the evidence, there had been no misrepresentation by C.; & in a letting of this description, the doctrine that there was an implied condition in the letting of a house that it should be reasonably fit for habitation, was inapplicable.

It may, however, be taken to be the law of the land that, if you find a house which is unfit to live in on account of its being infested with bugs, or that the drains are so bad that you cannot safely live in it, or that scarlet fever has been raging in it, in such cases as those, it would be unlawful to insist upon a man performing his contract to take such a house (BACON, V.-C.).—CHESTER v. condition if the house is so infested & overrun with bugs as to render it unfit for occupation; & as the condition applies to the whole house, it is a breach if any of the rooms are in that state. But it must appear that the nuisance existed to a serious & substantial extent, & was such as the tenant could not reasonably be expected either to endure or to extirpate. No distinction can be drawn between the occupation of servants & of other inmates, for servants are as much entitled as any others to proper rest & comfort.

It does not matter whether there is an actual express contract that the house shall be put into a fit state or not, for upon principles of law, there is an implied contract that a furnished house, let for present occupation, shall be fit for such occupation; & if a house is so infested by these insects, that it can not be inhabited by the inmates with proper rest & comfort, it is not in a clean & fit state for habitation (COCKBURN, C.J.).—CAMPBELL v. F. Other Premises.

3157. Warehouse.] — Pltfs. demised certain floors in a warehouse to deft. at a rent. He covenanted to repair, maintain, & keep the inside of the premises in good & tenantable repair & condition, & to deliver them up at the end of the term, damage by fire, storm, or tempest, or other inevitable accident, & reasonable wear & tear only excepted. Pltfs. covenanted to keep the walls, roof & main timbers of the premises in good & substantial repair & condition. The lease also contained a provision for the suspension of the rent in the event of the premises being burnt down, or damaged by fire, storm, or tempest.

Sub-lessees of deft. overloaded a floor with flour, in consequence of which the whole building fell. Pltfs. rebuilt it & sued for rent during the time the building was unoccupied, & for damages. Deft. denied liability, & claimed damages from pltfs.:—Held: there was no implied warranty by the pltfs. that the building was fit for the purpose for which it was to be used.

Part XIV.—Fixtures.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

3161. Definition of "fixture"—Anything annexed to freehold & removable at will.]—The term "fixtures" has now acquired the peculiar meaning of personal chattels which have been annexed to the freehold, but which are removable at the will of the person who has annexed them (PARKE, B.).—HALLEN v. RUNDER (1834), 1 Cr. M. & R. 266; 3 Tyr. 959; 3 L. J. Ex. 260; 149 E. R. 1080.

3162. — — — — —.]—Here the question is as to fixtures, trade fixtures, & what I may call domestic fixtures, & I wish to state that by "fixtures," we, for the Lords Justices & myself take the same view of the case, understand such things as are ordinarily affixed to the freehold for the convenience of the occupier, & which may be removed without material injury to the freehold, such will be machinery, using a generic term, & in houses, grates, cupboards, & other like things (LORD CRANWORTH, C.).—Re GAWAN, Ex p. BARCLAY (1855), 5 De G. M. & G. 403; 25 L. J. Bcy. 1; 26 L. T. O. S. 97; 19 J. P. 804; 1 Jur. N. S. 1145; 43 E. R. 926; sub nom. GAWAN v. BARCLAY, Ex p. BARCLAY, 4 W. R. 80, L. C. & L. JJ.

3163. — — — — —.]—As regards fixtures, we all know that the time was when everything affixed to the freehold was held to go with the freehold, & it was only by slow degrees that that unbending rule was modified, & came at last to assume the proportions which it now retains. In modern times there have come to be important exceptions to this rule, one being in favour of trade fixtures & entitling a person who has put up what are now called "fixtures," which means removable fixed things, for the purposes of trade to remove them. That exception is not confined to the case of landlord & tenant, meaning thereby the owner of the immediate reversion & a tenant for years only. The exception extends equally to the case of a tenant for life, & the person who comes into possession of the estate upon his death. There is another equally important & well-established exception from the rule, namely, in the case of articles which have been affixed to the freehold, not with the object of enhancing its value, but for purposes of ornamentation. Objects so fixed, as, for instance, chimney-glasses, are removable . . . & the exception would apply not only as between landlord & tenant for years, but also as between a tenant for life & the remainderman or reversioner who takes the estate subject to the life tenancy; & if the exception applies to a chimney-glass, I cannot see why it does not apply generally to all articles affixed for the purpose of enjoyment & ornamentation. . . . A great deal of time has been spent on the point how these tapestries were affixed to the walls. I daresay they were as firmly affixed as they would have been by a person who intended them to remain there always, but I do not think that is of much importance. Fortunately in such cases the ct. is not driven to inquire whether the screws which fix an object to a wall are one inch or two or three inches long, whether there were half-a-dozen or a dozen of them, or whether they did or did not penetrate into the plaster of the wall (RICHY, L.J.).

In dealing with the question of fixtures it sometimes becomes material to consider the object & purpose of the annexation, by which I do not mean that there must be an inquiry into the motive of the person who annexed them, but a consideration of the object & purpose of the annexation as it is to be inferred from the circumstances of the case (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—RE DE FALBE, WARD v. TAYLOR, [1901] 1 Ch. 523; 70 L. J. Ch. 286; 84 L. T. 273; 49 W. R. 455; 17 T. L. R. 246; 45 Sol. Jo. 294. C. A.; affd. sub nom. LEIGH v. TAYLOR, [1902] A. C. 157, H. L.

3164. — — —.]—The term "fixture" is an ambiguous one. It has been defined to be such an annexation as can be removed from land by the party annexing it adversely to the owner, but in its more general sense it means any annexation or addition which has been affixed to or planted in the soil of the land. Were this case one between landlord & tenant there is no doubt whatever but that the tenant could lawfully remove the steam engine & boiler in question (KELLY, C.B.).—CLIMIE v. WOOD (1868), L. R. 3 Exch. 257; 37 L. J. Ex. 158; 18 L. T. 609; 32 J. P. 712; affd. (1869), L. R. 4 Exch. 328, Ex. Ch.

3165. — — —.]—There are, with regard to matters of this kind, which are included under the comprehensive term of "fixtures," two general rules. . . . One of those rules is the general well-known rule that whatever is fixed to the freehold of land becomes part of the freehold or inheritance. The other is quite a different & a separate rule, whatever once becomes part of the inheritance cannot be severed by a limited owner, whether he be owner for life or for years. . . . To the second rule, namely the irremovability of things fixed to the inheritance, there is undoubtedly ground for a very important exception . . . in favour of fixtures which have been attached . . . for the purpose of trade, & perhaps in a minor degree for the purpose of agriculture. Under that exception a tenant who has fixed to the inheritance things for the purpose of trade has a certain power of severance & removal during the tenancy. . . . The fixture does become part of the inheritance; it does not remain a movable quoad omnia; there does exist on the part of the tenant a right to remove that which has been thus fixed, but if he does not exercise that right it continues to be that which it became when it was first fixed, a part of the inheritance (LORD CAIRNS, C.).

The meaning of the word [fixture] is anything annexed to the freehold, that is, fastened to or connected with it, not in mere juxtaposition with the soil. . . . An exception has been long established in favour of a tenant erecting fixtures for the purposes of trade, allowing him the privilege of removing them during the continuance of the term (LORD CHELMSFORD).—*BAIN v. 3170. Not fixtures.]—(1) The principle upon which the old rule of law, that fixtures pass with the soil, was relaxed in favour of trade, has no application where, as here, the parties who affixed the machinery were themselves the owners in fee of the soil (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).

(3) If the thing in question is an essential part of the machine, then, although movable, & although it may have been actually removed for a particular purpose—as a millstone removed for repair, still it is to be treated as belonging to the machine; & if the machine itself is held to be a fixture, the movable part of it must be also so held (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—MATHER v. (b) Forming Part of Architectural Design.

3172. Stone garden seats.]—Testator, who was tenant for life of settled estates, on which he had erected, fitted up, & furnished a mansion house, an old one having fallen into decay, bequeathed all the tapestry, marbles, statues, pictures with their frames & glasses, which should be in or about the house at the time of his death, & of which he had power to dispose, to be enjoyed as heirlooms by the persons who, under the limitations in his will, would be entitled to his own estates thereby devised in strict settlement, being the same as those entitled to the settled estates, subject to a condition, with a shifting clause in case the condition were not fulfilled. After testator's death, A. became tenant for life of both the settled & devised estates, & on his death the settled estates devolved on B.; but, as the condition was not fulfilled, C. became entitled to the devised estates & to the heirlooms under the shifting clause in testator's will. The question arose, as between B. & C., which of the articles passed under the will:—Held: tapestry, pictures in panels, frames filled with satin, & attached to the walls, & also statues, figures, vases, & stone garden-seats, purchased & placed by testator, which were essentially part of the house, or of the architectural design of the building or grounds, however fastened, were fixtures, & could not be removed; but glasses & pictures not in panels, not being part of the building, passed under testator's will.

In all these cases the question is not whether the thing itself is easily removable, but whether it is essentially a part of the building itself from which it is proposed to remove it, as in the familiar instance of the grinding stone of a flour mill, which is easily removable, but which is nevertheless a part of the mill itself. . . . With respect to the carved kneeling figures on the staircase in the great hall, & the sculptured marble vases in the hall, they appear to me to come within the category of articles that cannot be removed. I think it does not depend on whether any cement is used for fixing these articles, or whether they rest by their own weight, but upon this, whether they are strictly & properly part of the architectural design for the hall & staircase itself, & put in there as such, as distinguished from mere ornaments to be afterwards added (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—D'EYNCOURT v. that time held & occupied the same, & actually paid that rent, & was rated to & paid the rates for the relief of the poor. The cottage & garden, with the mill, were together of more than the annual value of £10, but exclusive of the mill, they were not of that annual value. The mill was of wood, & had a foundation of brick; but the wood-work was not inserted in the brick foundation, but rested upon it by its own weight alone. No part of the machinery of the mill touched the ground or any part of the foundation:—Held: the windmill not being affixed to the freehold, nor to anything connected with it, was not parcel of a tenement, & consequently, the pauper gained no settlement.

The question is, whether the mill be parcel of a tenement? To be so, it must be part & parcel of the freehold. Now it is not parcel of the freehold unless it be affixed to it, or to something previously connected with it. Here the mill was not affixed to the land, but merely rested on a foundation of brick. This is analagous to the case of a barn set upon pillars; & that is nothing more than a chattel (BAYLEY, J.).—R. v. OTLEY SUFFOLK (INHABITANTS) (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 161; 9 L. J. O. S. M. He may maintain trover for such a barn, against a party converting it. If the reversioner, having refused, while off the premises, to allow such tenant to take away the barn, afterwards, while a third party is in possession of the land, come on the land & prevent the tenant from entering to take the barn away, this is a conversion by the reversioner.—*WANSBROUGH v. 3185. Altar-stone in private chapel.—A lessor can maintain an action in detinue or trover for the recovery of specific articles wrongfully removed with the privy of the lessee from the demised premises during the tenancy.

An altar-stone consecrated by the Roman Catholic bishop for the time being of the district, & a case of sacred relics, had for more than twenty years remained in the respective places intended for the reception of such articles, the former in a space or cavity left for it on the top of the altar so that it fitted in & lay level with the rest of the surface, & the case of relics on a fixed marble block or pedestal designed for the purpose under the altar, in a private Roman Catholic chapel forming part of the mansion house on an estate settled in 1807 in a Roman Catholic family, & both altar-stone & relics were during that entire period used solely for purposes of such chapel as a place of religious worship. In 1885 a lease of a mansion house was granted to the husband of a sister of the present tenant for life, who was then an infant, by the trustees of the settlement under the powers thereof, & shortly before the termination of such lease in 1890 the altar-stone & relics were removed by another sister of the tenant for life, with the approval & by the direction of the lessee & his wife, & handed over to the successor of the bishop who had consecrated the altar-stone. At the time of granting the lease, which operated by way of revocation of uses & new appointment, the mansion house & appurtenances were in the charge of caretakers, whose expenses were charged against the tenant for life. The latter having brought an action after the expiration of the lease, against his sister, the late lessee's wife, pltf.'s other sister, & the present bishop, to recover the articles so removed, defts. contended that, the licence to use the chapel for mass having been withdrawn, the altar-stone was by the law or custom of their church properly given up to the bishop, to whom it belonged as the successor of him who had consecrated it, or else that the altar-stone, as well as, in any case, the relics had passed to one of defts. as personal chattels by the will of a former tenant for life under a bequest of all her "furniture & articles of household use or ornament" in or about the mansion house, & that at all events pltf. had, at the time of the removal neither title to nor possession of the articles so as to enable him to maintain the action:—Held: even if the former tenant for life under whose will defts. claimed that the articles had passed had been entitled to them so as to be able to dispose of them by will, which was at least doubtful, they did not under the circumstances of the case pass under the bequest referred to; according to the only law which that ct. could recognise, the bishop had no claim at all to the articles; they had by use come to form part of the chapel; they had been wrongfully removed & ought to be restored; & assuming, as decided, that the articles formed part of the chapel, pltf. had sufficient title by virtue of his estate, &, even if that decision were wrong, had, under the circumstances, ample possessory title to enable him to maintain the action for their recovery.—*PETRE v. 3187. Stone basin—Sunk in soil.]—When a chattel has been annexed by its owner to another's freehold, but may, without injury to the freehold, be severed, it is not necessarily to be inferred from the annexation that such chattel becomes the property of the freeholder. Whether, in a particular case, it has become so or not, may be a question on the evidence; & a jury may infer, from user or other circumstances, an agreement, when the chattel was annexed, that the original owner should have liberty to take it away again.

If a heavy stone basin is placed on a man's land, it is not a fixture. If it sinks into the soil, & in that manner becomes fixed, is it therefore a fixture? The rights, in such a case, must always be subject to explanation by evidence (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—WOOD v. HEWETT (1846), 8 Q. B. 913; 15 L. J. Q. B. 247; 7 L. T. O. S. 109; 10 J. 3191. —.]—For a very long period, the cts. have in certain cases substituted, what I may call a metaphysical, for a physical connection with the soil. The old cases which have gone to show that chattels physically capable of being disconnected from the tenement are nevertheless part of the freehold illustrate that principle. Everybody knows that a key, although in its nature a chattel, belongs to the house & passes with the freehold, & that the millstone, which is capable of being detached from the mill, is nevertheless part of the fee simple of the mill & passes with it. Those cases show that physical connection is not always necessary even to constitute a particular thing an integral part of a freehold (Fry, J.).—MOODY v. STEGGLES (1879), 12 Ch. D. 261; 48 L. J. 3203. Anvil.—Forming part of steam hammer.—]—It appears from the evidence that some Ashlar stone is laid upon a proper foundation made for it, of some depth in the ground, & this Ashlar stone is fixed to it with mortar in the ordinary way, & then the firm part of the steam hammer is screwed down on the stone by a number of screws. I am of opinion . . . that it is a fixture. . . . The anvil, though it is not fixed upon the ground, forms part of [the steam hammer], upon the very just distinction . . . that it essentially forms part of the machine, & which would be incomplete without it, just as much as a pump handle, which, though it may be removed from the pump, is still part of the pump, & passes with the freehold. . . . I am of opinion, also, that the boiler is fastened to the freehold, for it is fixed in the same way (ROMILLY, M.R.).—METROPOLITAN COUNTIES, ETC. SOCIETY v. BROWN (1859), 26 Beav. 454; 28 L. J. 3204. Driving belts.—Forming necessary parts of machinery.—]—A wheel factory, including the machinery & gear, was mortgaged to plffs. The deed of mtge. was not registered as a bill of sale. Leathern driving-belts were used in working the machinery at the factory; they were fastened to certain wheels or drums, but could be removed at pleasure when the machinery was thrown out of gear. They were necessary parts of the machinery. The mtgor. having liquidated his affairs under Bkpcy. Act, 1869 (c. 71), deft., his trustee, sold the belts:—Held: the belts passed to plffs. under the mtge. & they were entitled to maintain an action of conversion against deft.

These belts are not merely pieces of leather, but they were essential parts of certain machines, & these machines were affixed to the freehold. These belts were fitted to the machine, & were only fit to be used with it as part of it; & if the machine was part of the land, these belts were parts of the land (COTTON, L.J.).—SHEFFIELD & SOUTH YORKSHIRE PERMANENT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. 3205. Electric filament lamps.—Not essential part of wiring installation.—]—Plffs. let electric light filament lamps on hire to the lessees of a theatre. The lamps were affixed to their brackets by the bayonet attachment in common use for this purpose. Defts., who were the owners of the theatre, re-entered for non-payment of rent, the lamps being then still on the premises & no demand being then made for them by plffs. Shortly afterwards plffs. claimed them from defts., & as the latter did not give them up plffs. sued them in detinue:—Held: plffs. were not entitled to recover.

A filament lamp, although fitted or fixed in its socket, is only temporarily fixed with a view to the efficient use of the chattel itself, & that being so it does not, in my opinion, cease to be a chattel or pass to the landlord when the term comes to an end merely because it happens to be in the socket at that time. The lamps were not, I think, part of the installation. The installation is complete though no lamp may be supplied or be in the socket (LUSH, J.).—BRITISH ECONOMICAL LAMP CO., LTD. v. EMPIRE, MILE END, LTD. (1913), 20 T. L. R. 386.

3206. Gaseliers.—Necessary to gas pipe installation.—]—S. bought from A. the lease of a house, & one clause of the lease covenanted to convey under it all the fixtures on the premises generally. Under this clause A. claimed a right to remove certain gaseliers which were affixed to the gas pipes by means of screws, & could easily be removed without causing any injury to the freehold, on the ground that they came within the rule of tenants' fixtures:—Held: the gaseliers passed under the general description of fixtures in the lease, & became the property of S., as although they were removable without injury to the freehold, yet they were necessary to the practical enjoyment of the gas pipes, to which they were affixed, which without the gaseliers would be useless.—SEWELL v. (2) Machinery for the purposes of manufacture, e.g. "mules" used for spinning cotton, fixed, by means of screws, some into the wooden floors of a cotton-mill, & some by being sunk into the stone flooring, & secured by molten lead, are at law distrainable for rent. . . . The only question is, whether the machines when fixed were parcel of the freehold; & this is a question of fact, depending on the circumstances of each case, & principally on two considerations; first, the mode of annexation to the soil or fabric of the house, & the extent to which it is united to them, whether it can easily be removed, integre, salve, et commode, or not, without injury to itself or the fabric of the building; secondly, on the object & purpose of the annexation, whether it was for the permanent & substantial improvement of the dwelling, or merely for a temporary purpose, or the more complete enjoyment & use of it as a chattel. . . . We cannot doubt that the machines never became a part of the freehold. They were attached slightly, so as to be capable of removal without the least injury to the fabric of the building or to themselves; & the object & purpose of the annexation was, not to improve the inheritance, but merely to render the machines steadier & more capable of convenient use as chattels. They were never a part of the freehold, any more than a carpet would be which is attached to the floor by nails for the purpose of keeping it stretched out, or curtains, looking-glasses, pictures & other matters of an ornamental nature, which have been slightly attached to the walls of a dwelling as furniture, & which is probably the reason why they & similar articles have been held, in different cases, to be removable (PARKE, B.).—*HELLAWELL v. (b) Intention of Parties.

3219. Material in determining sufficiency.—It is a question of evidence, depending on circumstances & the intention of the parties, whether A's chattel, fixed on B's soil, becomes part of the soil or remains the chattel of A.

Piles fixed, in the bed of the Thames, in front of a wharf, for the purpose of mooring vessels making to the wharf, & long enjoyed for such purpose without interruption by the Crown or the conservators of the river, will be taken to have been put down in the exercise of an easement, & to remain as chattels in the owners of the wharf, so as to give them a right of action against any one injuring the piles.—LANCASTER v. EVE (1859), 5 C. B. N. S. 717; 28 L. J. C. P. 235; 32 L. T. O. S. 278; 5 Jur. N. S. 683; 7 W. R. 260; 141 E. R. 288.

3224. —.]—How far material.—In determining whether or not a chattel has become a fixture, the intention of the person affixing it to the soil is material only so far as it can be presumed from the degree & object of the annexation.

A gas engine was let out on the hire & purchase system under an agreement in writing, which provided that it should not become the property of the hirer until the payment of all the instalments, & should be removable by the owner on the failure of the hirer to pay any instalment. The engine was affixed to freehold land of the hirer for the better enjoyment of the freehold & not for the enjoyment of the chattel itself. Such intention can only be gathered from the nature of the chattel & the degree of annexation, expressions of intention on the part of the tenant cannot be regarded.—LOVE v. BLOOMFIELD, [1906] V. L. R. 723.—AUS.

by bolts & screws to prevent it from rocking, & was used by him for the purposes of his trade. Default having been made in the payment of the instalments, the engine was claimed by the owner, & also by a mtgee. of the land, who took his mtge. after the hiring agreement & without notice of it, & had entered into possession while the engine was still on the land:—Held: the engine was sufficiently annexed to the land to become a fixture, & any intention to be inferred from the terms of the hiring agreement that it should remain a chattel did not prevent it from becoming a fixture; & consequently it passed to the mtgee. as part of the freehold.—*HOBSON v. 3225. Burden of proof.]—The general maxim of law is, that what is annexed to the land becomes part of the land; but it is very difficult, if not impossible, to say with precision what constitutes an annexation sufficient for this purpose. It is a question which must depend on the circumstances of each case, & mainly on two circumstances, as indicating the intention, viz. the degree of annexation & the object of the annexation. . . . Perhaps the true rule is, that articles not otherwise attached to the land than by their own weight are not to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as to show that they were intended to be part of the land, the onus of showing that they were so intended lying on those who assert that they have ceased to be chattels, & that, on the contrary, an article which is affixed to the land even slightly is to be considered as part of the land, unless the circumstances are such as to show that it was intended all along to continue a chattel, the onus lying on those who contend that it is a chattel (BLACKBURN, J.)—*HOLLAND v. 3234. —.]—Articles were annexed by a shopkeeper to the premises of which he was a tenant for the purposes of the business without any intention, except so far as might be inferred from the degree of annexation, of permanently making them part of the freehold. These articles he assigned to a money-lender by a bill of sale. In considering whether these articles were "goods" in the possession, order, or disposition of the shopkeeper in his trade or business within Bkpcy. Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 44:—Held: the mere fact of some annexation of the articles to the freehold for the more efficient use of the articles as chattels was not of itself sufficient to convert them into realty, & therefore these articles remained goods within Bkpcy. Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 44, but that where the articles by their nature & by the degree of fixing were so annexed to the freehold as to lead to the inference that they were affixed for the better enjoyment of the freehold during the occupancy of the shopkeeper, they were not "goods" within Bkpcy. Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 44, although probably severable under the term.—HORWICH v. SYMOND (1915), 84 L. J. K. B. 1083; 112 L. T. 1011; 31 T. L. R. 212; [1915] H. B. R. 107, C. A.

ii. Particular Instances.

3235. Carpet.—(1) Looms put up by the lessee of a cotton mill for his convenience during the existence of his term, & fastened to the floor by nails driven through the loom feet into wooden plugs fitted into the floor, are, though easily movable without injury to the freehold, fixtures which will pass under an assignment of "the mill, fixed machinery, & hereditaments, with all looms & other machinery, fixed or movable," without the necessity of registering the assignment of chattels under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36.

(2) If the tenant has affixed to the freehold, during his tenancy, articles in such a manner as to make it appear that during the term they are not to be removed, & that he regards them as attached to the property, according to his interest in the property, then, on any dealing by him with the property to which these articles are affixed, the ct. would presume that he meant to deal with the property as it stood, with all these things so attached, & to pass the property in its then condition. . . . [Fixtures] are those things which an occupier has put up for his own convenience, & has also, for his own convenience, during the term, or during the existence of his interest, attached to the property which he holds. In the case of a carpet, it would be absurd to call that attached or fixed which, for the tenant's convenience, is removable, & is repeatedly removed, independently of the existence of the term, & without the least notion that the thing is then & there attached for the purpose of being so enjoyed during the continuance of the tenant's interest (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—BOYD v. SHORROCK (1867), L. R. 5 Eq. 72; 37 L. J. Ch. 144; 17 L. T. 197; 32 J. P. 211; 16 W. R. 102.

Afterwards, by indenture, in consideration of £500 paid to J. by deft., J. did bargain, sell, assign & set over to deft. machinery erected since the conveyance of the equity of redemption, subject to redemption on payment of the £500; &, by the same indenture, J. covenanted that the mill & machinery specified in the previous conveyance of the equity of redemption should be charged with the £500, as well as the money before secured upon it. The machinery comprised in the last mentioned indenture was erected for the purpose of carrying on the manufactory in the mill: &, for the more conveniently so doing, a part of it was screwed, nailed & otherwise fixed to the mill. J. became bkpt.; in anticipation of which, deft. took possession, & entered on the mill & the machinery, J. having been in possession for more than twenty-one days after the making of the indenture, up to the time of such entry. The machinery comprised in the last mentioned indenture still remaining on the premises, J.'s assignees claimed it, on the ground that such indenture had not been registered under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36:—Held: they were entitled to the machinery, the conveyance thereof being void as against them for want of registration; for that under the interpretation clause, sect. 7, the machinery was personal chattels, as the intention of the parties appeared to be that the machinery should pass separately from the realty, & so it had not become parcel of the freehold by annexation subsequent to the conveyance of the equity of redemption.—*WATERFALL v. (b) Permanent Benefit of Property.

i. In General.

3252. General rule.]—Where the owner of the inheritance annexes thereto [trade] fixtures, which would in the ordinary case of landlord & tenant be removable by the latter during his term, for a permanent purpose, & for the better enjoyment of his estate, they become part of the freehold.

A., the owner of land, in 1853, mortgaged it in fee to B., & afterwards erected certain buildings thereon, to which, for the more convenient use of the premises in his business of an innkeeper, brewer, & bath proprietor, he affixed a steam engine & boiler, a hay cutter, a malt mill or corn crusher, & a pair of grinding-stones. The lower grinder-stone was boxed on to the floor of part of the premises, by means of a frame screwed thereto, the upper one being fixed in the usual way; & the steam engine & other articles, except the boiler, were fastened by means of bolts & nuts to the walls or the floors for the purpose of steadying them, but were all capable of being removed without injury either to themselves or to the premises. The engine was used to supply water to the baths & to put the other machines in motion; & the whole were subservient to the business carried on by A. A. continued in possession until 1858, when he became bkpt.:—Held: his assignees were not entitled to claim these fixtures, but they passed to the assignee of the mtgee. as part of the freehold.—WALMSLEY v. MILNE (1859), 7 C. B. N. S. 115; 29 L. J. C. P. 97; 1 L. T. 62; 6 Jur. N. S. 125; 8 W. R. 138; 141 E. R. 759.

ii. Particular Instances.

3255. Building over saw-pit.]—If the erection over the saw-pit is let into the freehold p^ltf. has a right to it, & consequently his title depends upon its sustaining that character. This case therefore is so constituted that a matter of fact becomes a matter of title (SHADWELL, V.-C.).—SHIRREFF v. BARNARD (1836), 8 Sim. 161; 59 E. R. 65.

3256. Machinery—Affixed for purposes of trade.]—The owner in fee in possession of land & premises deposited the title deeds with a banking co. as an equitable mtge., to secure the balance of his account with them for the time being. He then erected a mill, & set up, not only steam power applicable to all mills, but machinery applicable only to the purposes of a particular manufacture which he carried on there. He afterwards made a bill of sale of all the machinery, the assignee having notice of the previous deposit of the deeds:—Held: as between the mtgees. & assignee, all of the machinery which was annexed to the floor, ceilings, or sides of the building, in a “quasi permanent manner,” by means of bolts & screws, passed to the mtgees.; & it made no difference that the object of the annexation was merely to steady the machines when in use, & that they could be removed without any injury to them or the freehold, nor that the machines were in the nature of trade fixtures, which would, as between landlord & tenant, belong to the tenant.

It is, no doubt, said in this case that the object of fixing was to insure steadiness & keep the machines in their places when worked; but the same thing could probably be said of most trade fixtures . . . & if the effect of this fixing is to cause the whole set of machines to be effectually used in the manufacture of wool & cloth, it seems very difficult to avoid coming to the conclusion that a necessary consequence is to cause the mill to be put to a more profitable use as a wool mill than it otherwise would be (HANNEN, J.).—LONG-BOTTOM v. BERRY (1869), L. R. 5 Q. B. 123; 10 B. & S. 852; 39 L. J. Q. B. 37; 22 L. T. 385.

3257. — Let with mill.]—A., who was a partner with B., deposited with their bankers the deeds of a freehold cotton mill belonging to A., as a security for advances made by the bankers for the use of the firm of A. & B.; & in the memorandum of deposit it was stated, that the buildings were insured for £2,000 & “the machinery, etc., for £2,000 more”; a steam-engine & other machinery having been previous to the deposit erected by A. & B. for the purposes of their trade. A. & B. continued in possession of the premises, with all the machinery, up to the period of their bkpcy.:—Held: the steam-engine & machinery, though removable by a tenant as fixtures erected by him for the purposes of trade, yet being firmly attached to the walls & floors of the buildings, & being such fixtures as are frequently put up by the owners of cotton mills, & let with the mills to a tenant, were not to be considered as in the reputed ownership of the bkpts., within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72.—Re OGDEN, Ex p. LOYD (1834), 3 Deac. & Ch. 765; 1 Mont. & A. 494; 3 L. The case of pictures hung on a wall for the purpose of being more conveniently seen may be mentioned by way of illustration. On the other hand, things may be made so completely a part of the land, as being essential to its convenient use, that even a tenant could not remove them. An example of this class of chattel may be found in doors or windows. Lastly, things may be annexed to land, for the purposes of trade or of domestic convenience or ornament, in so permanent a manner as really to form a part of the land; & yet the tenant who had erected them is entitled to remove them during his term, or, it may be, within a reasonable time after its expiration. Now in the present case we think, upon the evidence & findings of the jury, that the engine & boiler belonged to this last class, & if erected by a tenant might have been removed by him during his term. The reasons, however, for a tenant with a limited interest being allowed to remove trade fixtures, are not applicable to the owner of the fee (WILLES, J.).—CLIMIE v. WOOD (1869), L. Ptfs. erected hoardings, which were affixed in a very substantial manner to the land, & exhibited advertisements upon them. Ptfs. fell into arrear in their payments under the agreement, & defts. levied a distress upon the hoardings & ultimately carried them away & sold them. Ptfs. brought an action to recover damages for wrongful distress, & defts. counterclaimed for the amount of the arrears due under the agreement:—Held: even assuming the agreement created the relation of landlord & tenant between the parties, the advertisement hoardings, although removable by ptfs. at the end of the tenancy, were fixtures & not mere chattels, & were therefore not distrainable, & ptfs. were entitled to recover damages for the wrongful distress.

3293. Rails & sleepers—Laid in ballast.]—Three railways were connected with a coal mine, one within the mine, one within a yard attached to the colliery, & the third extending from the yard & affecting a junction with a public railway. The lessee of the mine had mortgaged it to plff., who had entered into possession. The rent being in arrear, the lessor distrained, amongst other things, the three railways. The railways were constructed in the following manner, the surface of the ground was prepared by having ballast spread upon it; sleepers were then embedded in the ballast & the ballast packed, & the rails were fastened to the sleepers by nails. In order to remove the rails, they were wrenched off the sleepers by means of bars & picks; & to remove the sleepers it was necessary to loosen the ballast by means of picks, & then with levers to raise them. The removal of the sleepers made holes in the ballast:—Held: the railways, by their mode of annexation to the soil, became fixtures & were not distrainable.—TURNER v. CAMERON (1870), L. R. 5 Q. The old cases upon this subject lean to consider as really whatever was annexed to the freehold by the occupier: but in modern times the leaning has always been the other way in favour of the tenant, in support of the interests of trade which is become the pillar of the state (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—PENTON v. 3299. ———.]—(1) Questions respecting the right to what are ordinarily called fixtures, principally arise between three classes of persons. First between different descriptions of representatives of the same owner of the inheritance; viz. between his heir & exor. In this first case, i.e. as between heir & exor., the rule obtains with the most rigour in favour of the inheritance & against the right to disannex therefrom, & to consider as a personal chattel anything which has been affixed thereto. Secondly, between the exors. of tenant for life or in tail, & the remainderman or reversioner; in which case the right to fixtures is considered more favourably for exors. than in the preceding case between heir & exor. The third case, & that in which the greatest latitude & indulgence has always been allowed in favour of the claim to having any particular articles considered as personal chattels as against the claim in respect of freehold or inheritance, is the case between landlord & tenant (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).

(2) The general rule on this subject is . . . that where a lessee having annexed anything to the freehold during his term, afterwards takes it away, it is waste. But this rule at a very early period had several exceptions attempted to be engrafted upon it, & which were at last effectually engrafted upon it, in favour of trade & of those vessels & utensils which are immediately subservient to the purposes of trade (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).

(3) The indulgence in favour of the tenant for years during the term has since been carried still further, & he has been allowed to carry away matters of ornament, as ornamental marble chimney-pieces, pier-glasses, hangings, wainscot fixed only by screws, & the like (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—ELWES v. 3300. ———.]—(1) As a general rule, the right of a landlord to fixtures annexed to the freehold is subject to two exceptions; one in favour of trade fixtures, if removed during the term, the other in favour of ornamental fixtures; the principle of the exceptions referring to the right of removal, & not to the affixing to the freehold.

That being the state of the law as to trade fixtures, the question arises which I have to determine, namely, when the exception to the general law was introduced in favour of trade fixtures, was it the principle of that exception that they were never affixed to the freehold at all; or was it that, although affixed to the freehold, there was an exception in favour of the right of removal. . . . The exception in favour of trade fixtures clearly was not to the annexation to the freehold, but that they were capable of being removed by the tenant within the term (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).

(2) There is another exception . . . with regard to ornamental fixtures, marble chimney-pieces for example. . . . It has been frequently held that, although they are built into the wall, or that portion of it where the aperture of the chimney is, still that the tenant may within the term remove them, on the ground that they were put there by the tenant merely for his temporary domestic use while he occupied the premises, & not as a permanent addition to the freehold (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).

(3) As to what constitutes such an annexation as to make a chattel a fixture in the house, it is impossible to lay down any rule. It depends on the circumstances of each case, which must be determined by the ct. or jury (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).

(4) If a tenant of premises carried on a trade or manufactory of any kind in those premises, & for the purposes & in exercise of that trade, put up fixtures, though they were clearly & firmly annexed to the freehold in the ordinary sense of the term, he was entitled, as between himself & landlord, but within the term only, to remove those fixtures. . . . There was, however, the proviso that they could . . . be removed without material injury to the freehold. I assume that if they cannot be removed without material injury to the freehold, the tenant has no right to remove them at all (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—GIBSON v. HAMMERSMITH & CITY RY. CO. 3314. Sheds.]—What erections the outgoing tenant may carry away from the premises. The buildings in question were two sheds, called Dutch barns, which had been erected by deft. during his term; & which, his counsel contended, he had by law a right to remove.

If a tenant will build upon premises demised to him, a substantial addition to the house, or add to its magnificence, he must leave his additions, at the expiration of his term, for the benefit of his landlord: but the law will make the most favourable construction for the tenant, where he has made necessary & useful erections for the benefit of his trade or manufacture, & which enable him to carry it on with more advantage. It has been held so in the case of cyder mills, & in other cases; & I shall not narrow the law, but hold erections of this sort, made for the benefit of trade, or constructed as the present, to be removable at the end of the term (LORD KENYON, C.J.)—*DEAN v. 3325. Chemical plant—Acid chambers.—A co. from the year 1857 until the year 1912 continuously occupied & carried on the business of manufacturers of artificial manure & sulphuric acid on premises held by them under three successive leases, being (a) a lease for lives granted in 1857, (b) a lease for lives granted in 1868 in consideration of the surrender of the 1857 lease & including a small additional piece of land, & (c) a lease for fourteen years, but determinable by the co. on six months' notice, granted in 1912 in pursuance of an agreement made in 1910, though subsequently varied in certain respects, immediately after the expiration of lease (b) by the cesser of the last life therein mentioned. Leases (b) & (c) contained a covenant to repair & yield up in repair the demised premises, including any existing or future "erections" or "buildings." The 1912 lease also contained a covenant to insure against damage by fire & to reinstate out of the policy moneys. Upon the premises the co., at their own expense, erected various ordinary buildings for the purposes of their manure manufacture, & also a complete set of sulphuric acid making plant on the "chamber process," consisting of pyrites burners, four reaction chambers, & two so-called "towers" usually known as a "Glover tower" & "Gay-Lussac tower." The "towers" & the three chambers were so erected before the 1868 lease, but the fourth chamber was put up between 1868 & 1910. Three of the chambers were of great size, approximately 140 feet long, 20 feet wide, & 14 feet high, & each consisted of a rectangular leaden vessel supported by & enclosed in a substantial wooden framework, the lowest part of which consisted of a series of beams resting mainly on but not fixed to stone walls & pillars, except in the case of one chamber, which rested almost entirely on unfixed iron columns. The fourth chamber was really an open tank standing on a wooden platform upon beams themselves rested on the stone walls & pillars. Each of the "towers" was in effect an upright "chamber" enclosed in a wooden framework & supported by four wooden posts having iron "shoes" & resting by their own weight on a necessary foundation. In 1916 a fire occurred on the premises, & shortly afterwards deft. co. determined their lease & removed all that was left of the materials of the chambers & towers. In an action by the lessor for damages for breach of the covenants in the 1912 lease:—Held: (1) the chambers & the towers must, having regard to all the circumstances, be regarded as integral portions of one composite building permanently annexed to the freehold, & not as chattels or as tenant's fixtures, & they were within the express terms of the covenant in the 1912 lease to repair & yield up; (2) (WARRINGTON, L.J.) even if during the term of the 1857 lease the three chambers then existing & the towers had been removable as tenant's fixtures, yet on the principle of Leschallas v. Woolf, No. 3498, post, the effect of the grant & acceptance of the 1868 lease was to put an end to any right of removal.—*POLE-CAREW v. 3343. ———.]—Whether a chattel is so annexed to the freehold as to be intended as an improvement to it, & to pass with it, or is annexed only for the purpose of temporary use or ornament, so as to be removable, is a question to be decided upon the facts of the case.

Valuable tapestries belonging to a tenant for life were fastened to the walls of the drawing-room in a mansion house by fixing small strips of wood by means of nails & screws to the wood with which the walls were lined; canvas was then stretched over the strips of wood & nailed to them, & the tapestries were fastened to the canvas by very small tacks. Mouldings were fixed round the strips of wood by thin nails & screws, some of which penetrated the face of the wall. The tapestries were an essential feature of the general scheme of decoration of the room:—Held: the tapestries were fixed for purposes of ornament in the only way in which it was possible to use & enjoy them, & did not pass to the remainderman on the death of the tenant for life, but were removable by her exors.

It is all very well to say that there is a difference between the cases of an heir & an exor. on the one hand, & a landlord & a tenant on the other; but if you grant the proposition that it must depend upon the purpose of the annexation, & you must attend to the degree of the annexation, I am wholly unable to frame a hypothesis of a state of things in which these two principles will not decide the question, whether you are dealing with a landlord & tenant, or whether you are dealing with a tenant for life & a remainderman, or with people standing in any other relation to these things (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

It appears to me that the thing is so easily susceptible of being removed & has in fact been removed, without any damage or material injury to the structure of the wall, that to my mind, so far as it is dependent upon a question of fact it never was intended to form part of the structure of this house (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

The mode of annexation is only one of the circumstances of the case, & not always the most important, & its relative importance is probably not what it was in ruder or simpler times (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

Where a tenant for a time or a tenant for life has purchased tapestries or pictures & affixed them to the walls for the purposes of ornamentation, he is entitled to remove them (LORD SHAND).—LEIGH v. TAYLOR, [1902] A. 3383. Pump.]—A pump erected by a tenant during his term, & very slightly affixed to the freehold, is removable as a tenant's fixture.

The rule has always been more relaxed as between landlord & tenant, than as between persons standing in other relations. It has been held that stoves are removable during the term; grates, ornamental chimney-pieces, wainscots fastened with screws, coppers, & various other articles: & the circumstance that, upon a change of occupiers, articles of this sort are usually allowed by landlords to be paid for by the incoming to the outgoing tenant, is confirmatory of this view of the question. Looking at the facts of this case; considering that the article in dispute was one of domestic convenience; that it was slightly fixed; was erected by the tenant; could be moved entire; & that the question is between the tenant & his landlord; I think the rule should be made absolute (TINDAL, C.J.).—GRYMES v. 3390. —.]—(1) A licence to construct & work a railway over the land of the licencor does not import an implied obligation on the part of the licensee to remove the structures at the termination of the licence. Nor can the licencor in the absence of express contract to that effect, compel the licensee to remove such structures.

In the case of landlord & tenant, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, a building erected by the tenant upon the demised land becomes part of the land, & at the expiration of the lease reverts to the landlord, who cannot oblige the tenant to remove it. The relationship of licencor & licensee presents an a fortiori case (LAWRENCE, J.).

(2) Pltf. co. became entitled, under two agreements made respectively in 1923 & 1925, to the right to occupy sufficient land of defts. at W. to construct & work a railway. Under the agreements, the co. were to be at liberty to sell the railway at the termination of the exhibition to be held on defts.' land at W., in which event defts. agreed to grant to the purchasers an option to be exercised by notice to defts. within fourteen days after the date of the contract for sale to occupy the land for the further period of one year from the closing of the exhibition, & the like option to be exercised within three months before the expiration of each succeeding year for an aggregate period of six years from the closing of the exhibition of 1925. The railway was worked during the exhibition which was held in the years 1924 to 1925. On Oct. 31, 1925, the exhibition was closed & defts. went into voluntary liquidation on Nov. 10, 1925. On Dec. 16, 1925, pltf. co., by a letter written by their solrs., asked the liquidators to renew the licence in their favour for another year, instead of in favour of purchasers of the railway from them. On Dec. 30, 1925, the liquidators wrote refusing that request, & claimed that, owing to the lapse of time since the closing of the exhibition, the licence had lapsed, & requested pltf. co. to remove the railway structures from the land of the deft. In this action, to which the liquidators were also defts., pltf. co. asked for a declaration that they were entitled to sell the railway with the benefit of the options, & an injunction to restrain defts. from selling their undertaking or assets except subject to the rights of pltf. co. Defts. counterclaimed for an order against pltf. co. to remove the railway structures from their land or damages for leaving them there. At the hearing, the liquidators, being desirous of selling the exhibition lands, free from the options, agreed that £35,000 debentures held by defts. in pltf. co. should be surrendered in consideration of pltf. co. foregoing any right they might have to specific performance & confining their claim to damages for breach of contract. On the questions whether the option had been exercised within a reasonable time, & whether pltf. co. were bound to remove the railway:—Held: on Dec. 30, 1925, a reasonable time had not elapsed from the closing of the exhibition, & an inquiry as to damages must be held.—NEVER-STOP RY. 3394. —.]—(1) The principle which, as between tenant & landlord, enables the former to remove during his term chattels which he has affixed to the soil for the benefit of his trade applies also to the case of tenant for life & remainderman, & allows the former, or his personal representatives, to remove chattels affixed to improve the estate for his own enjoyment. This is an exception to the maxim Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit, & not a concession allowing what has become part of the soil to be removed.

The question has been argued whether the true

Sect. 7.—Removal of fixtures: Sub-sect. 1, B. (a), (b) & (c); sub-sect. 2, A. & B. (a).]

principle is that where the tenant fixes chattels to the freehold with the right to remove them during his term, that right is an exception which enables him to remove part of the freehold or an exception by which the chattels do not become part of the freehold. It appears to me that the exception is an exception to the maxim Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. It is not that the law allows the tenant for years to remove part of the freehold, but that the chattels have not become part of the freehold. The exception makes them not part of the freehold (BUCKLEY, J.).

(2) The question is, not what is the nature of the attachment of the chattel to the soil, but what, having regard to all the facts of the case, must have been the intention of the tenant for life (BUCKLEY, J.).—Re HULSE, BEATTIE v. HULSE, [1905] 1 Ch. 406; 74 L. J. Ch. 246; 92 L. T. 232.

In regard to fixtures & a claim to remove them, the law has regard to the relations of the parties, & differs according to the nature of that relation. It will suffice to mention three sets of cases. As between landlord & tenant, the claim of the tenant to remove fixtures set up by himself is the most favoured; as between tenant for life & remainderman, the claim of the tenant for life to remove fixtures set up by himself is less favoured; & as between exor. & heir, where both claim under the same owner, the claim of the exor. to remove fixtures set up by the same owner is still less favoured. In considering any question of fixtures the important circumstances to be regarded are, first, the mode of annexation of the article & the extent to which it is united with the freehold; secondly, its nature & construction, as whether it has been put up for a temporary purpose or by way of permanent improvement; & thirdly, the effect its removal will have upon the freehold (CHITTY, J.).—*NORTON v. B. Expiration or Determination of Term.

(a) In General.

3417. Whether mode of determination of term material—Forfeiture.—Various engines & other fixtures, used in mining & smelting, were standing on the premises at the date of the demise, of which the engines were purchased by the incoming from the outgoing tenants, & were not mentioned in the general words of the demise, nor in the clause of re-entry. But the lessees covenanted to keep the "said engines," the word engines not having occurred before, in good & tenantable repair, & same in such state to yield up at the end, or other sooner determination of the term. The lessor covenanted that the lessees might remove, at the end of the term or sooner, except as in the cases & events before-mentioned, in any of which, a taking in execution being one, it was made lawful for the lessor to re-enter, as into his first or former estate, all such engines, etc., as had theretofore been erected, & all such as should by themselves be erected for carrying on the smelting business. By other covenants, the lessees covenanted to build an engine on the mining premises; & the lessor, that the lessees might, at any time during the term, or within twelve months after the expiration, or other sooner determination thereof, remove all such engines as last mentioned, unless the lessor should wish to repurchase same. The lessees built one engine & part of another, during the term:—Held: upon the forfeiture of the demise, by the taking in execution, the lessees had lost their right to remove any of the fixtures, & they all belonged to the lessor, such being the intention of the parties, as collected from the covenants.—It. v. TOPPING (1825), M'Cle. & Yo. 544; 148 E. R. 520.

3418 —.]—A tenant's right to things affixed to the freehold is at an end if he omits to detach them during his term or possession; & he cannot afterwards treat them as chattels, in an action of trover brought against the sheriff, for taking them under a writ of fi. fa.

Accordingly, where the lessee of certain collieries assigned good and chattels, & engines partly affixed to the freehold, to ptfs., & the lessor afterwards took possession of the collieries and engines, by reason of a forfeiture:—Held: ptfs. could not maintain an action of trover against the sheriff, who had taken the engines under a fi. fa. against the lessee, inasmuch as the latter had not detached them during the continuance of his possession.

The principle of law is, that quicquid solo plantatur, solo cedit. The right of a tenant is only to remove during his term the fixtures he may have put up, & so to make them cease to be any longer fixtures. . . . These engines, therefore, were never goods & chattels at all, so as to pass to ptfs. They had only the same right of removal as the tenant, which certainly ceased in June, 1829. . . . Here there is no doubt that the steam engines were left affixed to the freehold after the expiration of the term, & after ptfs. had any right to consider themselves tenants; & I am of opinion that trover is not maintainable for them (PARKE, B.).—MINSHALL v. LLOYD (1837), 2 M. & W. 450; Murp. & H. 125; 6 L. J. Ex. 115; 1 Jur. 336; 150 E. R. 834.

given up to deft. by the auctioneer, who had been in possession for the assignee, & deft. took possession on the same day the assignee had notice of the surrender. The lessee made no attempt or claim to recover the premises after the entry under the bill of sale. Between three & four weeks after the possession had been given up to deft. the assignee sold the greenhouse to pltf., who claimed to be entitled to enter & remove it:—Held: the facts showed a surrender by operation of law, & the greenhouse, not having been removed by the assignee within a reasonable time after notice of the surrender, had become the property of deft., & could not be removed.—*MOSS v. 3427. ———.]—A firm of brewers leased to one A. certain premises together with the landlord's fixtures & things mentioned in the schedule to the lease. The schedule included "all fixtures not mentioned in the tenant's inventory," & the tenant covenanted to yield up "the said fixtures & things" at the end of the term. A. sub-let part of the premises to a co. for the term of his lease, & the co. went into possession & put up certain fixtures. When A.'s lease was about to expire, it was continued on the same terms except that his tenancy was to be from week to week. Subsequently A. agreed to sell to one B. his term & interest together with the tenant's fixtures, B. expressing willingness to continue the tenancy of the co. No fixtures in the co.'s part of the premises were included in B.'s inventory. B. then obtained from the brewers a yearly tenancy of the premises, including the part sub-let to the co., "together with the landlord's fixtures & things mentioned in the schedule," which, however, was not filled in. On the same day B. sub-let to the co. on a quarterly tenancy the part of the premises previously sub-let to them by A. B. having determined the co.'s quarterly tenancy by notice, the co. began to remove certain fixtures from their part of the premises, but were forcibly prevented by B. from doing so. In an action by the co. against B. & the brewers:—Held: the fixtures put up by the co. were not included in the fixtures to be yielded up by A. at the end of his term, as the schedule to his lease only referred to things existing at the time of the demise to him, but as the co. by accepting a new sub-tenancy from B. had surrendered the sub-tenancy granted to them by A., they had no right to remove the fixtures.

In cases where the tenancy determines on an uncertain event, as in a lease for lives, the tenant may have a reasonable time to remove fixtures after the end of the last life (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—SLOUGH PICTURE HALL CO., LTD. v. WADE, WILSON v. NEVILLE, REID & CO., LTD. (1916), 32 T. L. R. 542.

The tenant of a public-house whose lease had expired, but who remained on in possession, although required by the landlord to give up the same, removed his trade fixtures after his tenancy had come to an end & a writ for possession had been served upon him, but before he had actually given up possession of the premises which were not going to be carried on as a public-house:—Held: the tenant had no right to remove the fixtures at the time he so removed them, & that the landlord was entitled to damages in respect of such wrongful removal; the measure of the damages was the value of the fixtures as chattels only, & not their value as fixtures if the premises were carried on as a going concern.

But, however that may be, we are clearly of opinion that the case of a surrender of a lease by a tenant, while tenant's fixtures remain affixed to the freehold, does not, either upon principle or the authority of decided cases, give any right to the tenant subsequently to remove such fixtures (THESIGER, L.J.).—Re *ROBERTS, Ex p. (c) Express Provision for Removal in Lease.

3446. Time for removal extended—Within reasonable time of expiry of term.]—By a lease, the lessee covenanted to erect a steam engine, machinery, & buildings proper for carrying on the business of a shipwright, on the land demised, & to leave same for the lessors at the expiration or other sooner determination of the term, "it being by the indenture declared that all steam & other engines, machinery, etc., set up upon the premises at any time during the term for the purpose of carrying on the trade of a shipwright, together with all fixtures, should not be removed therefrom, but should, upon the expiration or other sooner determination of the term, belong to the landlords, & not to the tenant, without any payment being made to him for same." The lease then went on to provide, "that the last mentioned stipulation should not be construed to apply to any machinery or other articles which might be erected or set up on the demised premises by the lessee during the term, for any other purpose than that of carrying on the business of a shipwright; but that it should be lawful for the lessee at any time during the term, or at the expiration thereof, to remove & take away all such last mentioned machinery, etc., from the demised premises." The lease then contained a further proviso, that, in the event of the lessee becoming bkpt., it should be lawful for the lessors to re-enter, " & upon such entry to take possession of, have, etc., as their own property, without paying anything for same, all steam & other engines, etc., which should be found on the premises, & which should be used or employed in or about the business of a shipbuilder thereon." The lessee having become bkpt., the lessors re-entered for the forfeiture:—Held: the assignees of the lessee were entitled to enter for the purpose of removing the fixtures other than those set up for the shipbuilding business, & to a reasonable time for that purpose.

It comes, then, to this, that the lessors are, at the expiration or other sooner determination of the term to take the shipbuilding fixtures, & the tenant is to have the others; & if so, it follows that the latter is to have a reasonable time for their removal (WILLIAMS, J.).—*STANSFELD v. 3453. ———.]—Right of purchaser or mortgagee of tenant.]—A lessee of business premises having become insolvent, the trustee in liquidation put up the fixtures for sale by auction, under conditions which required them to be "cleared" by the purchaser in two days from the sale. Pltf. bought the fixtures; but, with the knowledge of the trustee, allowed them to remain on the premises whilst he was treating with the landlord for a new lease. This negotiation fell through, & the trustee surrendered the premises to the landlord, who re-let them, the fixtures still remaining affixed. About a fortnight afterwards pltf., learning of the surrender, applied to the landlord for the fixtures. In an interpleader issue between pltf. & a person claiming title through the new tenant:—Held: pltf. had not lost his right by delay or laches, & he was entitled to the fixtures.

Therefore, though the term was surrendered yet pltf.'s right was not affected; deft. came into possession of the premises with chattels upon them, which were subject to the rights of a third person (CLEASBY, B.).—*SAINT v. SUB-SECT. 3.—EXERCISE OF RIGHT TO REMOVE.

3455. General rule—Must not result in injury to freehold.]—(1) The question whether a fixture can be removed by a tenant without substantial injury to the premises, is a proper question for the jury, upon an issue whether the fixture is removable or not by law.

(2) A plea to an action of trespass by a landlord against his tenant for removing a cornice, stated that it was the property of deft., that it was fixed up by him with screws only, for the purpose of ornament, that he carefully removed it during the term, doing no unnecessary damage, & that he repaired all the damage done. The replication stated that it was affixed to the freehold of the house, & was not removable by law. Issue on that question:—Held: it was not a misdirection to leave it to the jury to say whether they were of opinion that the cornice was ornamental, & was so affixed to the freehold that it could be removed without substantial injury; & if they thought so, & that it had been so removed, the tenant had a right to remove it.

(3) The question whether removable by law or not is a mixed question of law & fact.—VERY v. CHESLYN (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 75; 1 Har. & W. 283; 5 Nev. & M. K. B. 372; 111 E. R. 341.

others. The buildings were attached so as to be part of the soil, & so that they could not be removed without some disturbance which would not amount to a destruction of the soil. The buildings were from the first intended to be accessory to the mining, & there was nothing to show that the property in them was intended to be irrevocably annexed to the soil:—Held: the maxim quicquid plantatur solo solo cedat was not applicable, & the miners were entitled to pull down & remove the buildings while their interest in the mine continued & were not liable to the surface owners for so doing.

Whenever the chattels have been annexed to the land for the purpose of the better enjoying the land itself, the intention must clearly be presumed to be to annex the property in the chattels to the property in the land. . . . Where a chattel is so annexed that it cannot be removed without great damage to the land, it affords a strong ground for thinking that it was intended to be annexed in perpetuity to the land. . . . There can be no doubt on the admissions that the machinery & the buildings were from the first intended to be accessory to the mining & that there was not at any time an intention to make them accessory to the soil; & though, the foundations being . . . below the natural surface, they cannot be removed without some disturbance to the soil, it is, I think, impossible to hold that the amount of this disturbance is so great as to amount to a destruction of the land, or to show that the property in the materials must have been intended to be irrevocably annexed to the soil (LORD BLACKBURN).—*WAKE v. SUB-SECT. 6.—REMOVAL UNDER LICENCE.

3465. Necessity for seal.]—Pltf., tenant of a house for a term of years, being possessed of shelves, stoves, ranges, ovens, boilers & other articles of household use, his own property but annexed to the freehold, requested the landlord to purchase them at the expiration of the term or let them remain for purchase by the incoming tenant, but to be taken away by pltf. if the tenant should refuse them. The landlord wrote an answer, declining to purchase, but adding: "I have no objection to your leaving them on the premises & making the best terms you can with the incoming tenant." The articles remained unsevered from the freehold till the entry of the new tenant, who came in under demise from the same landlord, but who declined to take them. Pltf. then, after the tenant had been two months in possession, demanded liberty to enter & remove the fixtures; but the tenant refused permission; & pltf. thereupon brought case for the hindrance, & trover, against the tenant:—Held: (1) if the landlord's letter to pltf. amounted to a licence to take away the articles, yet, not being under seal, it was no valid grant of such privilege as against a new lessee in possession of the premises & not party to the licence; (2) the trover did not lie for the above articles, unsevered from the freehold.

The general principle is, that where the articles are of such a kind as to become fixed to the freehold, the tenant, if they are tenants fixtures, may remove them during the term or during such time as he may hold possession after the term in the capacity of a tenant (PATTESON, J.).—*ROFFEY v. A. In General.

3473. What amounts to—Whether covenant to put in fixtures—& deliver up premises in good repair.]—By the lease of an unfinished shop the lessees covenanted at their own expense to "complete & finish . . . all necessary fittings for the carrying on of the trade of a provision merchant" & also to deliver up the demised premises in good repair at the end of the term. In pursuance of their covenant the lessees affixed certain fittings to the premises which became "trade fixtures" & they removed them shortly before the end of the term:—Held: the covenants in the lease did not take away the right of the lessees during the term to remove the fittings as trade fixtures.—MOWATS, LTD. v. HUDSON BROTHERS, LTD. (1911), 105 L. T. 400, C. A.

3474. Effect of—Rights of underlessee.]—In an underlease of a nursery ground reserving the last three days of the term, the sub-lessee covenanted to deliver up to the sub-lessor the premises & all landlord's fixtures. The sub-lessee was not aware that his immediate lessors held under a superior lease by which they were bound to deliver up all trade fixtures at the end of the term, & he placed on the ground greenhouses & other trade fixtures, which shortly before the end of the term he sold, whereupon the reversioners under the superior lease obtained an injunction to restrain their removal. The sub-lessee sued his immediate lessors for loss of his trade fixtures, & the costs incurred in reference to the injunction:—Held: the action was not maintainable, as it could not be implied that the sub-lessors had guaranteed that pltf. might remove his trade fixtures without interference from the superior landlord.—PORTER v. DREW (1880), 5 C. P. D. 143; 49 L. J. Q. B. 482; 42 L. T. 151; 44 J. P. 267; 28 W. R. 672.

3475. Breach of covenant—Whether right of re-entry arises.]—Pltf. covenanted to yield up the fixtures to deft. at the end of his lease, & he has removed some; such removal gives no right of re-entry, for he may put them back during the term; but if he has removed them so recklessly as to commit damage, it would amount to want of repair. There must be reasonable repair, but there must also be a reasonable time for repair. As the rates were in arrear, deft. was entitled to enter; he was therefore properly in possession (JERVIS, C.J.).—DAVIS v. BURRELL & LANE (1851), 17 L. T. O. S. 56, N. B. Construction of Covenant.

(a) In General.

3477. Right to remove preserved—In absence of express provision.]—Coal & iron-works were demised, together with lands, & mines under other lands not included in the demise, with liberty to the lessees to make & use "roads & ways" over any of the lands, & to do all such other acts upon the lands as should be necessary for the purposes of the works, & the lessees covenanted to uphold & keep in good repair the furnaces & other works, houses & other buildings then standing, & which during the term should be erected & built on the demised land & all other the demised premises, & at the expiration of the term to deliver up the property & "all ways & roads in, upon or under the same lands" in such good order that the works might be continued by the lessor:—Held: this covenant did not extend to tram-plates fastened to sleepers not affixed to the freehold, which the tenant had placed upon roads for the purpose of using them as tramways, & the landlord therefore was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the tenant from disposing of them during the term.

A lease ought not, I think, to be construed so as to take away the ordinary legal right of a tenant to remove trade chattels unless such an intention is clearly expressed. . . . It appears to me material to consider the question whether these sleepers & trams [plates] were or were not affixed to the freehold; & I think it is perfectly clear upon the evidence that they were not so affixed. . . . What [the witnesses] mean by affixed to the freehold is merely that they are sunk in the soil by the pressure of the waggon passing over them (TURNER, L.J.).—BRAUFORT (DUKE) v. BATES (1862), 3 De G. F. & J. 381; 31 L. J. Ch. 481; 6 L. T. 82; 10 W. R. 200; 45 E. R. 926; sub nom. BATES v. BRAUFORT (DUKE), 8 Jur. N. S. 270, L. J.

3478. — — —.]—A lease to a tenant, who was therein described as a boot & shoe manufacturer, contained a covenant by the tenant to yield up the demised premises on the determination of the term, together with all doors, locks, keys, etc., wainscots, hearths, stoves, marble & other chimney-pieces, etc., " & all other erections, buildings, improvements, fixtures, & things which are now or which at any time during the said term hereby granted shall be fixed, fastened, or belong to " the demised premises. The word "machinery" did not occur in this covenant. There was also a covenant by the tenant that he would not carry on in the demised premises any trade or business, except that of a boot & shoe manufacturer, without the licence of the lessor, & that the tenant would not erect on the premises any machinery other than that propelled by hand or foot without the consent of the lessor. The tenant placed in the premises for the purposes of his business various machines, which for their more convenient user were fastened by screws or nails to the floor or to the walls of the premises. The tenant having become bkpt., the trustee in the bkpcy. desired to sell the machinery separately from the premises:—Held: the general words in the above covenant must be construed as applying only to things ejusdem generis with those described in the previous particular enumeration, which were of the nature of "landlord's fixtures," & the tenant was not deprived of his ordinary right to remove trade fixtures, such as the machinery in question, & consequently the trustee was entitled to sell the machinery.

When in such a covenant the things particularly enumerated belong to one genus—such as landlord's fixtures—general words which follow must be construed as applying only to things of the same genus.

Sect. 7.—Removal of fixtures: Sub-sect. 8, B. (a), (b), (c) & (d).]

If the landlord wishes to restrict his tenant's ordinary right to remove trade machinery or fixtures attached to the demised premises . . . the landlord must say so in plain language. If the language used leaves the matter doubtful, the ordinary right of the tenant to remove trade fixtures will not be affected (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—LAMBOURN v. McLELLAN, [1903] 2 Ch. 268; 72 L. J. Ch. 617; 88 L. T. 748; 51 W. R. 594; 19 T. L. R. 529; 47 Sol. Jo. 582, C. A.

(b) Erections, Buildings, Improvements.

3479. "Buildings"—Includes trade buildings—If fixed to freehold.]—NAYLOR v. COLLINGE, No. 3177, ante.

3480. ———.]—Lessee, who has erected fixtures for the purpose of trade upon the demised premises, & afterwards takes a new lease to commence at the expiration of his former one, which new lease contains a covenant to repair, will be bound to repair those fixtures, unless strong circumstances exist to show that they were not intended to pass under the general words of the second demise. Qu.: whether any circumstances dehors the deed can be alleged to show that they were not intended to pass. Q.: whether limekilns, erected for the purposes of trade, are removable.

Buildings erected for the purpose of trade under a lease containing such a covenant cannot be removed by the lessee, the terms of the covenant being general, & containing no exception. This is highly reasonable, because the expectation of buildings to be erected during a term & left at its expiration, is often one of the inducements to the granting of a lease & forms a considerable ingredient in the estimate of the rent to be reserved (ABBOTT, C.J.).—THRESHER v. EAST LONDON WATER WORKS CO. (1824), 2 B. & C. 608; 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 62; 2 L. J. O. S. K. B. 100; 107 E. R. 510.

3481. ——— New buildings erected by tenant—Allowance in respect of.]—A tenant, by the terms of his lease, was bound to uphold & maintain the houses let in sufficient tenantable condition, during the lease, & to leave them so at his removal, subject to a special provision, that the timber in the sub-tenant's houses should be valued at the commencement, & at the expiration of the tack; & that the outgoing tenant should pay, or receive from the proprietor or incoming tenant, the difference in value at those respective times. The lease contained a further provision, that if the tenant should build an additional steading during the lease, the value thereof, at the expiration of the lease, to be ascertained by arbiters, at that time, should be allowed to him. Holding under this lease, the tenant pulled down the old buildings, & built a new steading:—Held: (1) he was not authorised to pull down the old buildings without rebuilding or substituting others in their place, the knowledge of such unauthorised acts without interference on the part of the landlord did not conclude him on the principle of acquiescence, which is not applicable to such a case; but the tenant was entitled to the value of so much of the new steading as ought to be considered as an additional steading, & not a substitution for the old buildings, subject to the provision in the lease, as to the timber in the sub-tenant's houses; (2) the tenant was entitled to be allowed for so much of the new buildings as consistently with the former finding he was entitled to have an allowance for, according to a valuation to be fixed at the time of removal, & not according to actual expenditure.—SINCLAIR v. MANSON (1821), 3 Bli. 21; 4 E. R. 513, H. L.

3483. "Erections & improvements"—Includes greenhouse.]—A covenant to yield up at the expiration of the term all erections & improvements erected, made, or set up during the term is broken by the removal of the sashes & framework of a greenhouse erected during the term, the framework of which was laid upon walls built for the purpose of receiving it, & embedded in mortar thereon. A plea to such a breach, that it was agreed between the lessor & the termor, & that the lessor promised the termor, that if the latter would erect, make, & set up a certain erection & improvement, to wit, a greenhouse in & upon the premises during the continuance of the term, he should be at liberty to pull down & remove such greenhouse at the expiration of the term, provided no injury were done to the premises, that the termor confiding in the agreement & promise did erect, etc., & did at the expiration of the term remove such greenhouse, & that no injury or damage was done to the premises, was held to be a bad plea, upon which plff. was entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto.—WEST v. BLAKEWAY (1841), 2 Man. & G. 729; 9 Dowl. 846; Drinkwater, 179; 3 Scott, N. R. 199; 10 L. J. C. P. 173; 5 J. P. 435; 5 Jur. 630; 133 E. R. 940.

3484. "Erections, buildings & improvements"—Includes verandah.]—A tenant of a house, covenanting to keep in repair the premises & all erections, buildings, & improvements erected on the same during the term, & to yield up the same at the end of the term, cannot remove a verandah erected during the term, the lower part of which is affixed to the ground by means of posts.—*PENRY'S ADMINISTRATRIX v. 3485. "Erections, buildings, improvements & alterations"—Includes anything "in the nature of building or support of building"—Though made of iron.]—The lease contained a covenant to repair & yield up in repair the furnaces, fire engine, ironworks, dwelling-houses, & all other erections, buildings, improvements, & alterations, to be thereafter erected, built, or set up, except the ironwork castings, railways, wimseys, gins, machines, & the movable implements & materials used in or about the said furnaces, fire engine, ironworks, stone pits, & premises; & there was a power given to the lessors to purchase those articles, giving a certain notice before the expiration of the lease:—Held: defts. had a right to remove whatever was in the nature of a machine or part of a machine, but not what was in the nature of building or support of building, although made of iron; & in such removal defts. might disturb some brickwork as was necessary, & were not bound to restore it to a perfect state, as if the article it was intended to support or cover were still there; but defts. were liable for any unnecessary disturbance of brickwork.—*FOLEY v. 3487. "Improvements"—Includes plate glass front.—By indenture, A. demised to B. a messuage & premises for twenty-one years. The lease contained a covenant to repair, & a covenant that B., his exors., administrators, & assigns should at the determination of the term yield up the premises to pltf., his exors., etc., "together with all wainscots, windows, shutters, fastenings, etc., & other things which then were or at any time thereafter should be thereunto affixed or belonging, looking glasses & furniture excepted; & together also with all sheds & other erections, & improvements which should be erected, built, or made upon the demised premises, in good repair & condition." An assignee of the lease, during the term, removed an old shop-window, & put up in its place a plate glass front, but without in any manner fastening it, except by means of wedges, to the premises:—Held: this plate glass front was either a "window" or an "improvement" within the true meaning of the covenant, & therefore irremovable by the tenant at the end of the term, although erected for the purposes of trade.—HASLETT v. BURT (1856), 18 C. B. 893; 4 W. R. 679; 139 E. R. 1624; sub nom. BURT v. HASLETT, 25 L. J. C. P. 295; 27 L. T. O. S. 300; 20 J. P. 533; 2 Jur. N. S. 974, Ex. Ch.

3488. — Does not include glasshouses.—A landlord in 1887 demised a farm to deft. for a term expiring in 1901. The lease provided, clause 13, that in the last year the landlord might enter & sow certain seeds, & that the tenant should also leave gratis for the landlord "all the roots remaining unconsumed in the ground, & also all improvements made by the tenant, & all cultivations, dressings, & manures, in consideration of no claim being made by the landlord for similar matters on the tenant now entering." Deft. erected ten glasshouses. One had concrete sides, & its glass span-roof substantially rested on the sides & could be removed without damaging the walls. In the case of the other houses the glass span-roofs were supported by & nailed to wide sills which in turn were nailed to & supported by wooden piles driven into the ground. In these houses deft. grew grapes, peaches, nectarines, tomatoes, & strawberries, which he sold in Reading & Covent Garden, carrying on the trade of a market-gardener with his landlord's knowledge:—Held: (1) at common law deft. could lawfully remove the glasshouses unless precluded by clause 13 of the lease; (2) clause 13 did not preclude him, as on the construction of it "improvements" did not include glasshouses.—MEARS v. CALLENDER, [1901] 2 Ch. 388; 70 L. J. Ch. 621; 84 L. T. 618; 65 J. P. 615; 49 W. R. 584; 17 T. L. R. 518.

3494. Whether restricted to landlord's fixtures.—The right of a tenant to remove during his term chimney pieces, whether marble or not, & fixtures of the like sort, depends essentially on their being of an ornamental nature. The words "marble & other chimney-pieces" found in a covenant of a lease of a public-house between "locks, keys, bars, bolts" & "foot-paces & slabs," do not imply anything of an ornamental nature, but refer to such fixtures only as those with which they are classed, & commonly called landlord's fixtures. In such a lease, a covenant by the lessee to yield up the premises at the end of the term, "together with all locks, keys, bars, bolts, marble & other chimney-pieces, foot-paces, & slabs, & other fixtures & articles in the nature of fixtures, which should at any time during the said term be fixed or fastened to the said demised premises or be thereto belonging," extends to landlord's fixtures only.

With respect to locks & keys, bolts & bars, there can be no question, whether properly called fixtures or not, that the tenant cannot remove them; they are as much part of the house, & go with it, as the doors or windows to which they may be attached or belong; nor will there be any question as to the foot-paces or slabs, if upon examination it shall appear that the marble & other chimney-pieces to which they are appendages are also of the same class (COLERIDGE, J.).—

3495. —[By an agreement for a lease, it was provided that the tenant should at all times during the term keep sufficient & suitable fixtures & effects on the premises for the purposes desired, & that none of the movable furniture & effects should be removed therefrom, except for the purposes of repair or of being replaced by others; & also that in case the term should be determined by effluxion of time, but in no other case, it should be lawful for the tenant, within twenty-one days after the expiration of the term, but not during any other period, to remove such fixtures, if any, as he might have affixed to the premises, unless the landlord should elect to purchase same, which it should be lawful for him to do at a price to be settled by arbitration. It was further agreed, that in case the tenant became bkpt. or insolvent, "or if any distress or writ of extent or execution shall be lawfully levied or executed by seizure on the premises," etc., then in any of the said cases the landlord might re-enter & put out the tenant, " & also seize & retain for her own use, & as her own, all fixtures whatsoever, whether tenant's or trade fixtures," etc. After this agreement had been entered into, the tenant put up some fixtures on the premises, which were tenant's fixtures. These fixtures & the tenant's goods were seized by the sheriff, under a fi. fu. on a judgment against the tenant, at the suit of a creditor. The landlord thereupon put in a claim to the fixtures:—Held: by the agreement the tenant had renounced the ordinary tenant's right of removing fixtures during the term, & consequently the sheriff had no right to take the tenant's fixtures in execution.—DUMERGUE v. 3496. —[By a lease of land intended to be used for salt-works, the lessees covenanted that they would erect certain buildings & works, & that they would at the determination of the term "leave at the disposal of the lessors all the fixed materials of what nature or kind soever that should be in or about the said intended wychhouses or salt-works, or any ways relating thereto, save & except all the salt-pans & other movable articles made use of at all or at any of the said wychhouses or salt works," which they the lessees were to take away for their own use & benefit. The interest of the lessees became afterwards vested in defts., who took upon themselves the performance of the above covenant, & also covenanted that they would yield up possession of the premises, with all erections, buildings & improvements, together with the cisterns, doors, etc., & "also all other fixtures & appurtenances of what kind or nature soever which should be used in or about the buildings," "but as to the salt-pans & other articles made use of at all or any of the said wychhouses, etc., & belonging to defts. & their assigns, they should be at liberty to take & carry away from off the said premises, upon making good all such injury or damage as the said wychhouses, etc., might sustain in consequence of such removal," with an option to the lessors of purchasing any part of the salt-pans or other movable articles. Defts. sunk a brine-shaft & erected an apparatus for working it. They underlet the premises on Dec. 13, 1861. Pltfs., on June 23, 1862, wrote a letter demanding possession, as the underletting gave them a right of re-entry on the land; & an action of ejectment was brought on July 7, 1862. Between Jan. 18 & Mar. 17, 1863 defts. sold & removed a number of fixtures, etc., & on the last-mentioned day they confessed judgment in the action of ejectment:—Held: under the above covenants, defts. had a right to take away such fixtures as could properly be called tenant's fixtures; & they were entitled to a reasonable time after the receipt of the letter of June 23, 1862, within which they might remove them.—SUMNER v. (2) An agreement was made with a co. to grant them a lease of certain land as soon as they had spent £3,000 "in the erection of permanent & substantial buildings & works such as are usually erected for the distillation of oil," & there was a covenant to cover in the "erections" & buildings when necessary:—Held: "erections" was a wider term than buildings, & might include trade fixtures.—BIDDER v. 3498. —[A lease of houses made in 185 for a term of seventy years contained a lessee's covenant at the expiration or determination of the term to deliver up the demised premises "with all & singular the fixtures & articles belonging thereto." In 1907 the lease was vested in A. & the premises were occupied & used as a common lodging-house by W., who held as a weekly tenant from A. In June, 1907, the lessors served on A a notice to repair the premises, & A. in writing made an offer to surrender the premises at once & to pay £100 towards the repairs, & this offer was accepted by the lessors. W., who had affixed to the premises things alleged to be tenant's or trade fixtures, was aware of what was going on, but the lessors did not know of his sub-tenancy until July 1, 1907. The lessors & A. wished to get rid of the sub-tenancy, & W. knew that this was their intention, & early in Aug. A. gave, & W. accepted, a notice to quit on Aug. 19. By an agreement in writing dated Aug. 7 between the lessors & W., the latter became the weekly tenant of the lessors as from Aug. 12, but no agreement was entered into with reference to W.'s fixtures. By a surrender by deed executed on Aug. 9, but dated Aug. 6 so as to make it precede the agreement with W., A., as beneficial owner, surrendered & assigned the demised premises to the lessors, "to the intent that the residue . . . unexpired of the term of years" therein might merge & be extinguished in the freehold & inheritance. On Sept. 12, 1907, the lessors served W. with a notice to quit on Sept. 23 :—Held : (1) the lessee's covenant to deliver was binding on W., & was not confined to landlord's fixtures, but extended to tenant's & trade fixtures ; (2) an agreement to surrender precluded the lessee from removing fixtures then upon the demised premises, although they were tenant's or trade fixtures, but would not affect his sub-tenant's right of removal without the consent of the latter, although the exercise of that right might make the lessee unable to complete his contract with the lessor ; (3) a contract to surrender a lease was a contract to surrender in possession free from sub-tenancies ; (4) if W. consented to the surrender, his tenancy was thereby surrendered & his right to remove fixtures was gone ; (5) if W. did not consent to the surrender, he was between Aug. 9 & 12 the tenant of the lessors under the sub-tenancy granted by A., & even a rightful removal during this period by W. would have been a breach of the covenants for title implied by A.'s surrender ; (6) by accepting the tenancy commencing on Aug. 12 W. surrendered such tenancy as he already had & with it any right to remove fixtures. Seem : if a tenant, on surrendering his lease in order that a new lease be granted, makes no stipulation to the contrary, he loses his right to remove fixtures, inasmuch as the surrender prima facie includes fixtures, & the subject of the new lease is prima facie what is surrendered in order to be redemised ; although in exceptional cases a termor remaining in possession after the expiration of his term under circumstances showing that there is merely a prolongation of the term is allowed to remove fixtures after the term is ended.

In my opinion, however, if the tenant upon the surrender of his lease in order that a new lease may be granted makes no stipulation to the contrary, he does lose his right to remove tenant's fixtures, for the surrender of the demised premises prima facie includes fixtures, & the subject of the new lease is prima facie what is surrendered in order to be redemised (PARKER, J.).—LESCHALLAS v. (2) If the jibs are to be considered as annexed to & parcel of the freehold, then admitting that plufs. might have removed them during the term, as being erections for the benefit of trade, yet they could not after the term maintain trover for them; because the action of trover is maintainable in respect of personal chattels only. The second count was on the possession of the assignees, & alleged a conversion by said defts.:—Held: the declaration alleged in each count a sufficient breach as against the four defts.

On a declaration in trover for goods, chattels, & fixtures, enumerating, among other merely movable articles, stoves, shelves, closets, cupboards, etc., general damages having been assessed on the whole declaration:—Held: the word "fixtures" would not necessarily be taken to mean things affixed to the freehold, & therefore the judgment ought not to be arrested.

It does not necessarily follow that the word "fixtures" must import things affixed to the freehold, nor has the word necessarily acquired that legal sense. . . . Three years "improved or rack rent"—Recoverable by landlord—On failure of tenant to give notice of writ of ejectment.—Demise by lease of certain lands, together with the mines under them, with liberty to dig for ore in other mines under the surface of other lands not demised; the tenant fraudulently concealed a declaration in ejectment delivered to him, & suffered judgment to go by default. The declaration in ejectment did not mention mines at all, but the sheriff, in executing the writ of possession, by the concurrence of the tenant, delivered possession of the premises demised to the tenant, & also of those mines in which he had liberty to dig:—Held: although the latter could not be recovered under the declaration in ejectment, still the tenant by his own act had estopped himself from taking that objection, & in an action for the value of three years' improved rent, under Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (c. 19), the landlord might recover the treble rent, in respect not only of the demised premises, but of the mines in which the tenant had only a liberty to dig. The improved or rack rent mentioned in Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (c. 19), s. 12, is not the rent reserved, but such a rent as the landlord & tenant might fairly agree on at the time of delivering the declaration in ejectment, in case the premises were then to be let.—*CROCKER v. 3532. Payment for use of room & steam power.]

—A., had the use of a room in a factory belonging to B. in which A., kept some machines, which were worked by steam power supplied by B., from an engine in another room; B. had a right to enter A.'s room to oil the machinery. A. had to pay a sum of money weekly for the use of the room & the steam power. Several weekly payments were in arrear. B., in A.'s absence, entered A.'s room by means of a window, which A. had left unfastened, he having also locked the door, & then distrained the machines:—Held: if there were a demise at all, it was of the exclusive possession of the room, & if there were such a demise, B. had no right to enter by the window for the purpose of distraining. Semble: the money payable for the use of the room & steam power was not a rent issuing out of the ground on which the machines stood.—*HANCOCK v. 3539. — Whether lease in writing or constructive—Unless land out of jurisdiction.]—(1) Rent due ranks as a specialty debt where the relation of landlord & tenant exists in respect of lands within the jurisdiction whether that relation exists upon a lease or a constructive tenancy from year to year. But where there had only been an agreement for a lease, & an entering into possession & the master found, following an affidavit in the same words, that testator, after the first half year's rent had accrued due from time to time admitted the claim in respect of the rent, & by the agreement the rent was made payable annually:—Held: the relation of landlord & tenant did not exist so as to make rent due rank as a specialty debt.

(2) The land, the subject of the agreement, being land in Jamaica:—Held: the above doctrine being founded upon privity of estate, rent in arrear could have no priority in the administration of assets in England, even had the land been actually demised.—VINCENT v. GODSON (1854), 4 De G. M. & G. 546; 2 Eq. Rep. 834; 24 L. J. Ch. 121; 23 L. T. O. S. 85; 2 W. R. 408; 43 E. R. 620, L. C.

3541. — Under agreement for lease—Agreement under seal.]—By an agreement under seal, E. covenanted with B., his exors. & administrators, that he would at any time thereafter, at the request of B., his exors., administrators or assigns, execute a demise of certain freeholds for the term of twenty-one years, at the yearly rent of £180, which lease should contain a covenant to keep the premises in good & substantial repair, & all other usual covenants; & B. thereby, for himself, his exors., or administrators, covenanted with E., whenever thereto requested by E., to accept such lease, & execute a counterpart thereof. Under this agreement B. entered & paid rent until his death, which took place before Jan. 1, 1870, & after his death his widow & legal personal representative entered & paid rent. No lease was ever executed, & no such request, as above-mentioned, was ever made by either party. Since B.'s death rent had accrued due, & a sum was required for repairs:—Held: the liability under the deed was from the first, & still was, a specialty; hence, a claim by E. for the sums due for arrears of rent & dilapidations under the covenants agreed to be entered into by B. were debts by specialty against his estate. Qu.: whether an arrear of rent accruing due after the death of a lessee by lease or parol, dying before Jan. 1, 1870, ranks as a specialty debt against his estate.—*KIDD v. 3546. —.]—On appeal against a poor rate, by the occupier of a brick field, a case was stated showing: that applt. held the land, ten acres, for the purpose of getting from it clay to make bricks, under a lease for seven or fourteen years, or till the earth should be all dug out; that he paid £2 per acre, without reference to the use made of the land, & a royalty of 1s. 6d. for every thousand of bricks moulded in any one year; that the value of land in the parish, let for general agricultural purposes, was £2 6s. a year; that applt. had on the field four brickmaking "stools," each stool capable of producing 750,000 bricks; that the field originally contained sufficient clay for thirty-one millions of bricks; that in the year before the rate was laid applt. had made nearly three millions; & that there remained clay enough for twelve millions. The sessions also found that the rent which a tenant would have been willing to pay on taking a lease of the premises with liberty to consume the brick earth, & without being liable to royalty, was £10 per acre; & they confirmed the rate, by which applt. was assessed at £2 6s. per acre, & for royalty at 1s. 6d. per thousand on as many bricks as the stools were capable of producing in a year:—Held: (1) the rent, estimated according to Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (c. 96), s. 1, was the proper criterion of the rate on this property; & assuming the above facts to have appeared, without any specific finding as to the rent which a tenant would be willing to pay; the royalty, together with the fixed annual charge, was properly considered as the rent; the payment in respect of the brick earth was not the less a rent because the subject matter of the renting was in a course of being wholly consumed; in absence of proof to the contrary, the sessions were right in assuming the number of bricks which the stools could make to have been actually made within the year of rating; the rate was properly assessed on the number supposed to be made in the particular year; & no deduction was to be made for the breeze, ashes, & other materials used in making the bricks, it being presumable that these were allowed for in fixing the royalty; (2) the sessions having found specifically the sum which a tenant in their opinion would give on taking a lease with liberty to consume the earth, & without royalty, namely £10 a year per acre, that sum, from which tenant's rates & taxes were to be deducted, must be considered as the rent within the meaning of Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (c. 96), s. 1; & no inference from other facts was admissible; & this ct. ordered the rate to be amended accordingly.

(3) In another case not materially differing, but in which the sessions neither expressly stated the rent which, in their opinion, a tenant might reasonably be expected to pay, nor gave data for estimating it, except by stating the number of stools at work, & the amount of royalty actually paid, under an agreement still subsisting, in the five years immediately before that for which the rate was made; & the question propounded was "What is the net annual value of the land?" :—Held: the fixed sum paid for occupation, & the royalty, constituted the rent: but this ct. could not determine the amount which, at the time of making the rate, a tenant about to take a lease might reasonably be expected to pay. Nor, in the absence of materials for such estimate, could the assessment be grounded on the ordinary amount of rent paid for land in the parish used for agricultural purposes, or the amount paid for the best garden in the parish. The ct. sent the rate back to the sessions, to be amended according to the principles laid down in the preceding case.—R. v. WESTBROOK, R. v. EVERIST (1847), 10 Q. B. 178; 2 New Mag. 3547. On coal raised—Rent passing with reversion—Though described as "consideration."—In a mining lease, besides an annual surface rent, certain sums, payable half-yearly, described as "further consideration-money" & depending upon the rate of working the mines, were reserved to the lessor, his heirs & assigns:—Held: on the death of the lessor intestate, these sums were, not purchase-money passing to the personal representative of the lessor, but in the nature of rent, & therefore passed to the heir as incident to the reversion.—BARRS v. LEA (1864), 3 New Rep. 635; 33 L. J. Ch. 437; 10 L. T. 567; 10 Jur. N. S. 996; 12 W. R. 525.

3548. —.]—An express power, in the ordinary form, in a mining lease which reserves rents & royalties, to distrain for rent in arrear on goods & chattels of the lessee on premises other than those demised, is not a "licence to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt," within the meaning of Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), s. 4, & is not therefore invalidated by that Act when unregistered.

Although these rents were in the nature of royalties payable for the coal won, they were rents which could be distrained for at common law on the property demised without any express power of distress (LINDLEY, L.J.).—*Re ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO., LEE v. W., during the demise, assigned to pltf. "the rents, reservations & royalties, & all other the estate, right, title," etc., of W., "of, in, or in respect of the demised premises; & the benefit of the covenants in the said lease contained." In an action by pltf. to recover arrears in lieu of royalties, accrued since the assignment:—Held: (1) by the deed of W. in 1846, a rent was created, & not a mere covenant in gross; such rent was assignable, & pltf., as assignee of W., could sue deft. for such rent; (2) the fact, that deft. had been prevented by pltf. from using the railway, did not constitute an eviction, so as to disentitle pltf. to the rent: the use of the railway being an easement, & not part of the demise.—*WILLIAMS v. It is asked whether this is a covenant for the payment of a gross sum or for the payment of rent. Upon all the authorities, I consider it a payment in the nature of rent. The cases of Newcomb v. Hardy, No. 3561, post, & Lloyd v. Langford, No. 3559, post, both show that where the whole of a term is assigned, a gross sum reserved periodically to the assignor is a payment in the nature of rent. If it were held otherwise, great injustice might be occasioned, as the tenant, if evicted, would have no answer to an action on his covenant, for payment of the sum in question ; whereas if it be considered as rent, eviction would be answer to the lessor's claim. As to the case of Thorn v. Woolcombe, No. 6798, post, it amounts to no more than a decision, that when the term is merged in the inheritance, the rent reserved is extinguished ; little more than had before been decided in Webb v. Russell, No. 3585, post, which excited so much attention at the time, but which has long been recognised as undoubted law. It is a fallacy to say plf's. sue as assignees of the reversion ; they sue on privity of contract ; & the contract is one on which they are entitled to recover (TINDAL, C.J.)—*BAKER v. 3560. —.]—The doctrine of estoppel between landlord & tenant is founded upon the principle, that a lessee, having accepted a lease, may not plead to the action of his lessor nil habuit in tenementis. But the lessee may plead to such an action, that the lessor had an interest at the date of the lease, but that such interest had determined before the alleged cause of action arose. Therefore, if a termor affect to grant a lease for term exceeding his own term in duration, & to reserve an annual rent, that would operate as an assignment of his term, & there would be no estoppel between him & the person to whom he made such assignment ; & accordingly, it would be doubtful whether the assignor would have any remedies for recovering the rent. 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, does not give power to distrain for such a rent.—*LANGFORD v. the premises as mentioned in the lease, & should pay a particular sum over & above the rent annually towards the goodwill already paid by such assignee;” such agreement operates as a surrender of the whole term. The sum in the agreement is considered as a sum to be paid annually in gross, not as rent; & the assignee cannot distrain either for that or for the original rent; but he has a remedy by assumpsit for the sum reserved for the goodwill.

Pltf. was to hold on the terms mentioned in the lease, & to pay £8 10s. over & above the rent annually reserved towards the goodwill; that in my apprehension does not mean a sum to be paid as a rent, but a sum in gross (ASHURST, J.).—SMITH v. MAPLEBACK (1786), 1 Term Rep. 441; 99 E. R. 1186.

3563. ———.]—In 1896 a brewery co. who were lessees of a public-house granted an underlease of same to I., who mortgaged his interest to pltf., & gave a second mtge. to the co. In 1901 I. became bkpt., & deft. was appointed his trustee in bkpcy. In 1902 the co. went into possession as second mtgees. & let the public-house to a tenant who agreed to pay a rent of £150 a year for the premises & an additional yearly sum of £1,250 in lieu of premium for goodwill. On Mar. 8, 1909, the co. obtained judgment against their tenant for £960 & gave him a month's notice to determine his tenancy. On Mar. 9, 1909, before the tenancy expired, pltf. commenced a fore-closure action against deft. & the co., & on Mar. 12 a receiver & manager was appointed, to whom the co. was directed to give up possession. Later on the same day the sheriff levied execution in respect of the co.'s judgment debt:—Held: (1) the receiver was “landlord” of the premises within Landlord & Tenant Act, 1709 (c. 18), s. 1, & as such was entitled to be paid by the execution creditor one year's arrears of the rent; (2) the rent comprised the £150 only, the £1,250 not being rent within the statute.—COX v. 3565. ———.]—A landlord who had demised premises for a term of years at £50 a year, agreed with his tenant to lay out £50 in making certain improvements upon them, the tenant undertaking to pay him an increased rent of £5 a year during the remainder of the term, of which several years were unexpired, to commence from the quarter preceding the completion of the work:—Held: the landlord, having done the work, might recover arrears of the £5 a year against the tenant, though the agreement had not been signed by either party; for that it was not a contract for any interest in or concerning lands within Stat. Frauds; nor was it, according to that statute, an agreement “not to be performed within one year from the making thereof,” no time being fixed for the performance on the part of the landlord.

Is there any additional interest in the land given to the landlord? It is said to be a purchase of a rent of £5 a year for the sum of £50, & therefore an interest in or concerning the land; but though it be called a rent in the present contract, & also a rent in the declaration, yet we are of opinion that it is not rent in the legal sense & understanding of the word rent (LITLEDAL, J.).

3566. ——— Garden rent.]—Pltf. purchased at a sale by auction certain property described in the particulars & conditions of sale as follows: “Four freehold ground rents of £10 4s. each, viz., £15 ground rent & £4 4s. garden rent, amounting to £76 16s. per year, arising from the four capital residences of the annual value of £384, held by four leases granted to W. R. for a term of ninety-five years each (wanting ten days from Sept. 29, 1844, with reversion to the property in about eighty years.” In accordance with the conditions of sale, pltf. paid deft., the auctioneer, the sum of £282 as a deposit & in part payment of the purchase-money. The vendors in making out this title produced a counterpart of a lease granted by one R. R. to one W. R., the other three leases being similar. This lease demised a piece of land, with a messuage erected thereon, at “the yearly rent of £15 of lawful money payable,” etc., & thereby “for the considerations agreed, & also in consideration of the further rent thereafter reserved, & of the covenants & agreements of W.R.,” R. R. covenanted & agreed with W. R. that for the term of ninety-five years W. R. should “have the right to enter in & upon & use & enjoy as a pleasure ground or garden the piece of land adjoining,” etc. The deed contained a covenant by W. R. to pay to R. R. the yearly sum of £15 & that he would also “pay the further yearly rent of £4 4s. for & in respect of the right of user thereinbefore granted of the garden or pleasure ground”:—Held: the garden rent of £4 4s. was not a freehold ground rent within the meaning of the particulars of sale; & pltf., therefore, had a right to rescind the contract & recover back the deposit.—ROBINS v. 3567. Suit to the lord's mill.]—A. being seised in fee of a mill & of certain lands, granted a lease of the latter for years, the lessee yielding & paying to the lessor, his heirs & assigns, certain rents, & doing certain suits & services; & also doing suit to the mill of the lessor, his heirs & assigns, by grinding all such corn there as should grow upon the demised premises. The lessor afterwards devised the mill & the reversion of the demised premises to the same person:—Held: the reservation of the suit to the mill was in the nature of a rent, & the implied covenant to render it resulting from the reddendum, was a covenant that ran with the land as long as the ownership of the mill & the demised premises belonged to the same person, & consequently the assignee of the 3568. Service.—In return for wages & right of pasture.—In 1809 a master agreed to give his servant certain wages, & the right of feeding his cow in his master's pasture. The servant was to serve as waggoner, & it was a part of the agreement that he should board his mate. Subsequently in 1810 by another agreement, the servant was to have the right of feeding another cow on his master's pasture. The cows were fed alike under these two agreements, for eighteen months. The value of the feeding exceeded £10 per annum.—Held: the servant thereby gained a settlement, by renting a "tenement" of the value of £10 a year.—*R. v. 3573. Lessee keeping down interest on mortgage.—Comrs. of a navigation, having borrowed £28,000. on mtge., & being still in want of funds, agreed to let the navigation & tolls for ninety-nine years, the lessee undertaking to make certain advances, which he did, & to pay the interest of the £28,000. Part of the term having expired, & the validity of the agreement being doubted, an Act was passed, reciting that that agreement had been entered into bonâ fide, had been beneficial to the public, & would be so if continued; it therefore empowered the comrs. to lease the navigation & tolls, which, however, were lowered, for the remainder of the term, to the persons entitled under the former agreement; & enacted, that they should pay the interest of the £28,000 yearly to the mtgees.; in default of which the comrs. might require the toll collector to pay such interest to the mtgees. out of the moneys in his hands. On appeal against a rate laid upon the lessees in respect of the navigation:—Held: the interest paid by the lessees was in substance a rent, & the rate ought to be calculated upon it; & the lessees were not occupiers under a beneficial lease, though the interest was only £1,400 a year, & his annual earnings at the time of making the rate were £3,418., from which, however, about £1,000 was to be deducted for repairs, etc.; one year's value being no criterion, & there being no proof that the rent was unduly small.—*R. v. Disputes arose between the parties, & A. brought an action against B. under the agreement, & B. filed a bill against A. to have the agreement set aside. The parties then referred all the matters in dispute between them, to arbitration, & the arbitrator awarded that the agreement for a lease was valid; that it should be cancelled, & that B. should pay to A. the sum of £5,513; B. died, & a suit was instituted to administer his estate, under which A. carried in a claim to rank as a specialty creditor in respect of the sum awarded:—Held: the sum was awarded by way of damages & not for rent, & therefore was not entitled to rank as a specialty debt.

Rent is a specialty debt, but . . . it must be distinctly shown that the claim is for rent only before it would rank as a specialty debt in priority of payment (MALINS, V.-C.).—TALBOT v. SHREWSBURY (EARL) (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 26; 42 L. J. Ch. 877; 21 W. R. 473.

These included the one in respect of which the wayleave was granted. SECT. 3.—RESERVATION OF RENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

3588. Who may reserve—Whether equitable owner.—B. being mtgee. in fee simple of certain lands, & the equity of redemption in fee belonging to A., by indenture of lease & release dated Oct. 1838, between A. of the first part, B. of the second part, T. of the third part, & H. of the fourth part, A. did limit & appoint, & B. conveyed to H., & A. confirmed the lands, to have & to hold the same to H., his heirs & assigns, to the use of H., his heirs & assigns, for ever, subject to a proviso for redemption by A., his heirs, etc., on payment of £5,000. Amongst other provisos there was one, that if default should be made in payment of the £5,000, it should be lawful for H., his heirs & assigns, to sell. This deed contained a proviso for quiet enjoyment by A. until default. Also the following:—"Provided always, & it is hereby expressly agreed & declared between & by the parties hereto, that if at any time hereafter, when & so soon as H. & every other person claiming, or to claim by, from, through or under him, shall, under or by virtue of any power or authority herein contained, enter into or upon or otherwise become possessed of the premises, or any part thereof, the same shall from thenceforth be subjected & be charged to & with the payment to A. & his assigns of the annual sum of £40; & the same shall thenceforth be recovered or recoverable by distress or otherwise upon or out of the mtged. premises." This conveyance was executed by B. & A., but not by H. Default having been made in payment, H. entered into possession for the purpose of exercising the power of sale, & by indenture, dated in 1847, he conveyed to one C., who entered into possession of the lands & duly paid the £40 rent:—Held: the charge of the rent of £40 a year was not a good reservation of a rent, inasmuch as it was in favour of a person not having a legal estate in the land.

By law a good reservation of rent can only be made to the legal owner (MARTIN, B.).—GILBERTSON v. RICHARDS (1859), 4 H. & N. 277; 28 L. J. Ex. 158; 33 L. T. O. S. 107; affd. (1860), 5 H. & N. 453, Ex. Ch.

3589. Mode of reservation—By will.—If land be devised upon condition, or reserving rent, it is void, for the reservation of rent or re-entry cannot be good but in respect that the reservor may by possibility take advantage of it, & the heir cannot have that which his ancestor himself could never have.—ANON. (undated), Plowd. 3591. What amounts to reservation—Proviso for payment.—Articles by which "it is covenanted & agreed that A. doth let the said lands, etc." amount to an immediate lease, & a proviso that the lessee "shall pay to the said A. annually," etc. is a good reservation of rent, & not a condition.—*HARRINGTON v. The lease & counterpart were engrossed & executed. Upon a bill filed by the lessor to rectify the mistake:—Held: (1) deft. was entitled to retain or reject the lease; if retained, the lease must be reformed by the insertion of the higher rent; if rejected the higher rent must be paid for the use & occupation, with a set-off for repairs, but not for the expenses of establishing deft. in business there; (2) if the lease was given up, pltf. must repay the money which had been advanced on its security, or the house must stand as security to the mtgee. for the amount, with costs; but pltf. was entitled to repayment; & if the lease was rectified, he had a right to retain it as security.—GARRARD v. 3606. ————]—A rent, the amount of which may fluctuate according to the happening of certain events, is not an uncertain rent.

A member of a building society borrowed £7,500 from the society, which was to be repaid in a series of monthly instalments of £71 17s. 6d. each, including interest at 7 per cent. The instalments were payable at the monthly meetings of the society, & if the member neglected to pay them, when due he became liable to a fine, at the rate of 5 per cent. per month on the total amount in arrear & unpaid at each meeting. To secure the loan he executed to the trustees of the society a mtge. of real estate. The deed contained a proviso that if the member should fail for three monthly meetings to pay his subscriptions, interest, fines, or other moneys, or to observe the regulations of the society, or in the event of his becoming bkpt., the mtgees. might enter into possession or receipt of the rents of the mtged. property. & "for the better securing the payments which by the rules of the society ought to be made by the mtgor." it was agreed that, if the mtgees. should at any time become entitled to enter into possession or receipt of the rents, & the mtgor. should then or afterwards be in the occupation of the whole or part of the property, he should during such occupation be tenant thereof from month to month to the mtgees., at a monthly rent equal in amount to the moneys which ought to be paid monthly by the mtgor. from time to time for subscriptions, interest, fines, & other moneys under the rules, & that the tenancy should commence on the day up to which he should have fully paid all & every part of such subscriptions, interest, fines, & other moneys, & the rent for the period intervening between the commencement of the tenancy & the day on which the trustees should be entitled to enter into possession or receipt of rents should be payable & paid on that day, & the monthly rent due upon & subsequently to that day should become due monthly in advance, & be payable at the monthly meetings, the first payment of rent becoming due on the day on which the mtgees. should first become entitled to enter into possession. Power was given to the mtgees. to determine the tenancy by fourteen days' notice. The deed was not executed by the mtgees., nor was it registered under Bills of Sale Act. The mtgor. committed default in his payments, & was afterwards adjudicated a bkpt. :—Held: the attornment clause, & distresses levied under it for rent which accrued due both before & after the commencement of the bkpcy., were valid as against the trustee in the bkpcy. It was no objection to the attornment clause that the monthly rent was fluctuating in amount.

It is true that, if that which is agreed upon as the payment is uncertain, it is not a rent. It must be certain. But the rent is certain if, by calculation & upon the happening of certain events, it becomes certain, & . . . the mere fact of rent being fluctuating does not make it uncertain (BRETT, L.J.).—*Re KNIGHT, Ex p. 3610. — “Id certum est quod certum reddi potest.”]—It was objected that the rent here was uncertain, by reason of the provision for deductions in respect of possible failure in the supply of working power. But it is new to me that a rent is uncertain because it cannot be ascertained at the time of the demise what rent will become payable on a future contingency. If that were so, a reservation of rent at so much per ton of hay or per boll of wheat would be open to the same objection. So also in the case of an additional rent to be paid in the event of the tenant using the land in a particular manner. There the amount of rent must necessarily be uncertain, because you cannot tell beforehand whether or not the land will be so used. These payments are sometimes called penalties; but in truth they are rents payable by reason of the additional use of the land, at per acre, or so forth. Such a rent may clearly be distrained for. The maxim, id certum est quod certum reddi potest, applies (WILLES, J.).—SELBY v. GREAVES (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 594; 37 L. J. C. P. 251; 19 L. T. 186; 16 W. R. 1127.

SUB-SECT. 5.—SINGLE RENT RESERVED IN RESPECT OF LAND AND CHATTELS.

3640. General rule.—If a man demises a house & land for years, with a stock or sum of money rendering rent, & the lessee covenants for him, his exors., administrators, & assigns, to deliver the stock or sum of money at the end of the term, yet the assignee shall not be charged with this covenant: for although the rent reserved was increased in respect of the stock or sum, yet the rent did not issue out of the stock or sum, but out of the land only (per CUR.).—SPENCER'S CASE, No. 4536, post.

3642. —.—It must occur constantly that the value of demised premises is increased by the goods upon the premises, & yet the rent reserved still continues to issue out of the house or land, & not out of the goods; for rent cannot issue out of goods (MANSFIELD, C.J.).—*NEWMAN v. 3643. —.—Declaration in debt for rent stated a demise of a messuage, land, & premises, with the appurtenances. The proof was of a demise of a messuage, & land, together with the furniture, utensils, & implements:—Held: as the rent issued out of the real property, & not out of the furniture, it was sufficient for plff. to allege & prove a demise of the real property, & therefore there was no variance.—FAREWELL v. DICKENSON (1827), 6 B. & C. 251; 9 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 245; 5 L. J. O. S. K. B. 154; 108 E. R. 446. Annotations:—Refd. Brown v. Peto, [1900] 1 Q. B. 346. Mentd. Evans v. Robins (1864), 12 W. 3644. —.—There is no doubt in my mind that this lease is a lease of part of the land mortgaged. It is none the less such a lease because it comprises in addition certain chattels; nor were the mtgees. in any way injured by the addition, for, in my opinion, the whole rent must be taken as issuing out of the land, & as being therefore recoverable by the mtgees. when they come to take possession (BIGHAM, J.).—*BROWN v. 3646. Land & chattels in separate ownership.—

Whether rent severable.—The owner of a house, having mortgaged it in fee, & continuing in possession let it as a ready furnished house to debt. He afterwards became bkpt. & then, with the assent of his assignees, let the house ready furnished to debt., by the week, who, after three weeks' occupation, received notice from the mtgee. to pay rent to him. In an action brought by the assignees for use & occupation of the house & furniture:—Held: they were entitled to recover for the use of the furniture; the rent of the house & furniture might be apportioned, or if not, upon the entry of the mtgee. claiming the house, & having no interest in the furniture a new agreement might be inferred by the jury to take the house at a reasonable rent from the mtgee., & to pay a reasonable amount as a compensation for the use of the furniture to the assignees.—*SALMON v. time. M. was let into possession within a month from the above treaty. After the expiration of a quarter, W. distrained for rent, the furniture not having been sent in as promised. PART XV. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 8.

3657 i. Whether operating as new demise.]—Before the expiry of the lease an arrangement was made between the co. & the landlord for a reduction of the rent after the expiry of the lease, nothing being said as to the other terms:—Held: the arrangement made imported the terms of the old lease, so far as applicable.—Re CANADA COAL CO., DALTON'S CLAIM (1895), 27 O. R. 151.—CAN.

3657 ii. —.]—A verbal agreement to accept a lesser rent than that mentioned in an agreement to grant a lease, followed by acceptance thereof, is not, per se, an abandonment of the former contract; nor does it operate as a substitution of a new agreement for the former one; or as the creation of a new tenancy, in which the old tenancy merged.—CLARKE v. MOORE (1844), 1 Jo. & Lat. 723.—IR.

g. Lease of licensed premises —

¶ 3655. —.]—Avowry for rent due on a demise of £40 per annum. Pleas in bar, (a) non tenuit modo et forma; (b) as to a part of the rent, that it was not due. Pltf. held under a lease, reserving £40 per annum in the body thereof; but, before the lease was executed, the following words were added, between which & the body of the lease the signatures were written. "The allowance of the road to the Six Bells' yard to be made as usual." It had been usual for the lessor to allow the lessee £5 per annum for so much annually paid by the lessee to a third party for the use of such road to the demised premises:—Held: this did not reduce the reservation to £35 per annum, so as to entitle pltf. to a verdict on the plea of non tenuit.

Qu.: whether a payment made under this memorandum would have been evidence under the plea of riens in arrears.—DAVIES v. STACEY (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 506; 4 Per. & Dav. 157; 9 L. J. Q. B. 393; 113 E. R. 904.

3656. —.]—*Partial occupation by lessor.]—*If there be a written agreement between landlord & tenant, that for certain premises the tenant shall pay £170 a year & afterwards an arrangement is made by parol that £30 a year shall be allowed out of it, because the landlord is to occupy a certain part for a time, such parol arrangement does not vary the agreement so as to reduce the rent payable under it; & therefore an allegation is correct which states it to be £170.—HILTON v. GOODHIND (1827), 2 C. & P. 591, N. P.

3657. Whether operating as new demise.]—By a written agreement, pltf. let to deft. certain premises at a rent of 20s. a week, payable as demanded; four weeks' notice to quit from any day to be sufficient. During the continuance of this tenancy, pltf. verbally agreed with deft. to accept 16s. a week, which was accordingly paid, & on two occasions, deft. submitted to a distress for that amount:—Held: no new demise was thereby created, & consequently the county ct. had no jurisdiction under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 122, the rent being above £50.—CROWLEY v. VITTY (1852), 7 Exch. 319; Cox, M. & H. 582; 21 L. J. Ex. 135; 18 L. T. O. S. 270; 16 J. P. 360; 155 E. R. 968.

These premises had been let to W., whose tenancy expired on May 13, 1851, & who had omitted to give a notice to quit to one of his undertenants who occupied a cottage at a yearly rent of £5; & in consequence, pltf. could not obtain possession of that part of the premises. It was then agreed that deft. should receive from the undertenant rent for two half years & deduct that £5 from the rent to be paid for the whole by pltf., & that pltf. should pay £70 to deft. on Nov. 14, 1851, & May 14, 1852:—Held: such agreement operated as a new 3662. Effect of non-payment of reduced rent—Reversion to old rate.—Certain premises having been demised to a tenant, his assignees entered into an agreement with their landlord altering the terms on which the rent was to be paid under the demise. The rent was paid for a short period on the new basis, when on the assignees becoming bkpt. the landlord distrained after the bkpcy. for the rent then due according to the demise, & not on the altered basis. The trustee paid the rent claimed under protest:—Held: the landlord was entitled to distrain after the bkpcy. for the rent due according to the terms of the demise, as the effect of the agreement was merely to postpone the landlord's rights under the demise so long as the rent was paid on the altered basis according to the agreement, & as the rent had not been so paid, the landlord's rights under the demise could be enforced.—Re SMITH & HARTOGS, Ex p. OFFICIAL RECEIVER (1895), 73 L. T. 221; 44 W. R. 79; 39 Sol. Jo. 672; 2 Mans. 400; 15 R. 641.

3663. Lease of licensed premises—Rent reduced if beer supplied by lessor—Right of lessee to purchase elsewhere.—The lease of a public-house contained a covenant that the lessee & his assigns would, during the term, purchase all beer required for the business from the lessors, a proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent, or non-performance of the covenants, & a provision for reduction of the rent so long as the lessee should purchase beer from the lessors:—Held: the covenant to purchase beer was an absolute one, & the lessee had not the alternative of dealing with a rival brewer & paying the unreduced rent.—HANBURY v. CUNDY (1887), 58 L. T. 155.

3664. — Effect of assignment.—A covenant by the lessee contained in the lease of an hotel that he will not during the term created by the lease buy, receive, sell, or dispose of, in, upon, out of, or about the premises any wines or spirits other than shall have been bona fide supplied by or through the lessor, a wine & spirit merchant, his successors or assigns, is a covenant which runs with the land, & is binding on the assigns of the lessee, even though such assigns are not mentioned; & where such covenant is coupled with a proviso for abatement from the rent so long as the lessee shall well & truly observe the covenant, the assigns of the lessee are entitled to the benefit of the proviso, & may claim the abatement, notwithstanding that the ownership of the business of the lessor & the ownership of the reversion have been severed by a sale of the business, while they continue to obtain wines & spirits from the purchasers of the business.—WHITE v. SOUTHERN HOTEL CO., [1897] 1 Ch. 767; 66 L. J. Ch. 387; 76 L. T. 273; 45 W. R. 434; 13 T. L. R. 310; 41 Sol. Jo. 384, C. A.

3665. Whether writing necessary.—Where the lessee of a house, & his partner in trade, agreed to pay the lessor annually, during the residue of the lessee's term, 10 per cent. on the cost of new buildings, if the lessor would erect them:—Held: (1) this agreement was not required by Stat. Frauds to be in writing; (2) though the partner quitted the premises, he was liable on this collateral agreement during the residue of the term; only the original rent could be distrained for & this was merely a collateral agreement to pay so much more money during the residue of the term, if the lessor would make the desired expenditure.—*HOBV v. 3667. ——Debt on an indenture for rent. Plea, that whilst deft. was in the occupation of the demised premises, & before the rent became due, it was agreed between pltf. & deft., that pltf. should make certain alterations, & in consideration thereof, deft. should relinquish his interest under the indenture, & accept a fresh lease for 7 years at an increased rent; & until such lease should be tendered to deft., he should hold the premises as tenant from year to year, at the increased rent; that pltf. executed the alterations; that deft. relinquished his interest under the indenture, & held the premises under the agreement; & that no new lease was executed; by means of which premises deft. became tenant from year to year, & all his interest under the indenture was surrendered to pltf. by act & operation of law. 3670. ——— Agreement acted upon.]—A fire having occurred upon leasehold premises, the lessor entered. Subsequently an executory agreement was entered into between the parties for a new lease at an increased rent, as was evidenced by letters which passed between them, in one of which a suggestion was made that a memorandum should be indorsed upon the old lease referring to the increase of rent. This was not carried out, but payments of the increased rent were demanded & made, but under protest by the lessee's solr. Upon the bkpcy. of the lessee the lessor distrained for rent at the increased rate. The county ct. judge held that the old lease was still subsisting, & that consequently the old rental alone could be distrained for:—Held: the old lease was surrendered by operation of law, & the agreement for an increased rent having been made & acted upon, the distress for such increased rent was lawful.—*RE YOUNG, Ex p. The tenant undertook to use, occupy, dress, & manure the land according to the custom of the country. The tenant, without the consent of the landlord, suffered other persons to use small portions of the land for the purpose of raising a potato crop. It was proved to be the custom of the country for farmers to pursue that course:—Held: the landlord was entitled to the additional rent, this being an occupation of the land by other persons.—*GREENSLADE v. Annotation:—Reid. Evans v. Robins (1864), 12 W. R. 604.

3712. — Provision for "first payment" at end of six months—Whether more than one quarter's rent due.]—By agreement, dated Sept. 8, deft. agreed to let a house to pltf. for seven years, at an annual rent, payable quarterly, the first payment to be made on Mar. 25, following:—Held: a quarter's rent only became due on Mar. 25.—LUTCHINS v. SCOTT (1837), 2 M. & W. 809; Murp. & H. 194; 6 L. J. Ex. 186; 1 Jur. 265; 150 E. R. 985.

3713. Rent reserved quarterly.]—Under an agreement for the quarterly payment of rent, the first payment becomes due at the end of the first quarter, & the custom of the country to pay rent in advance cannot be imported into it.—DOE d. MITCHELL v. WELLER (1837), 1 Jur. 622.

3714. Option of lessor to vary times of payment—Necessity for notice.]—Deft. reserved rent, payable quarterly, or half quarterly, if required. Deft. having received the rent quarterly for a twelvemonth:—Held: he could not, without notice, distrain for a half quarter's rent.—MALLAM v. ARDEN (1833), 10 Bing. 299; 3 Moo. & S. 793; 3 L. J. C. P. 48; 131 E. R. 919.

3715. — Whether option exercised.]—In an action of trover brought by assignees of a bkpt., it appeared that bkpt. held the premises in question, from Nov. 12, as yearly tenant to deft., but "if required, to pay the rent quarterly." On May 12, following, deft. demanded half a year's rent, which was paid, & in Aug. distrained for a quarter's rent, due on Aug. 12:—Held: deft. had not, either by the demand in May or the distress in Aug., exercised his option to make the rent payable quarterly; & therefore, the distress was wrongful, & pltf. were entitled to recover.

The rent was payable quarterly at the option of the landlord; & on one occasion he demanded half a year's rent, & it was paid; but that was by no means a decision that the rent was to be payable quarterly (LORD DENMAN, C.J.).—BIRD v. LODGE (1848), 11 L. T. O. S. 102.

(d) When Rent becomes in Arrear.

3716. Day after due date.]—A tenant on the morning of the quarter day fraudulently removed his goods with intent to avoid a distress for the rent which became due on that day. The landlord, after the rent had become in arrear, & within thirty days of the removal, followed & seized the goods as a distress:—Held: his seizure was justified under Distress for Rent Act, 1738 (c. 19), s. 1, the rent being due & payable, though not in arrear, at the time of the removal.—DIBBLE v. BOWATER (1853), 2 E. & B. 504; 1 C. L. R. 877; 22 L. J. Q. B. 396; 17 J. P. 792; 17 Jur. 1054; 1 W. R. 435; 118 E. R. 879; sub nom. BIDDLE v. BOWATER, 21 L. T. O. S. 105.

3717. — Though due date Sunday.]—At common law Sunday is not a dies non. Rent may lawfully be paid by a tenant on a Sunday. Therefore where it is due on that day, & is not paid, it will be in arrear on the following Monday, & the landlord may then lawfully levy a distress for it.—CHILD v. EDWARDS, [1909] 2 K. 3741. Stipulation for payment in advance—What amounts to.]—Deft. occupied premises from Dec. 1, 1830, under an agreement, dated Feb. 1831, for the term of one year, the rent to be paid on the usual quarter days, "the first day of payment to be on Dec. 25 last." He paid four quarters' rent, the last payment being on Sept. 29, 1831; &, on Dec. 4, sent the key of the premises to the landlord, who, on Dec. 20, gave possession to a new tenant:—Held: the agreement was for payment of rent in advance, &, therefore, debt. was entitled to costs, under 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, on an arrest & holding to bail for a whole quarter's rent.—ALLEN v. BATES (1833), 3 L. J. Ex. 39.

3742. ———.]—A tender of a quarter's rent, coupled with a demand of a receipt to a particular day, the contest between the parties being whether one or two quarters' rent were due, is not a valid tender.

A. held premises of B. under a lease for three, seven, or ten years, determinable on notice; with a stipulation that the amount of a quarter's rent should be paid by A. on taking possession, which was to be allowed to him for the last quarter's rent, "on the determination of the tenancy." After a notice to determine the lease at the expiration of the third year had been given, & before its expiration, the parties verbally agreed that A. should continue tenant for another year, no express mention being made of the terms of the tenancy:—Held: the above was in substance a stipulation for a forehand rent; &, in the absence of any express mention of other terms, A. continued to hold subject to the terms of the original lease: &, consequently, the payment made on taking possession, was applicable to the last quarter of the fourth year.—FINCH v. MILLER (1848), 5 C. B. 428; 10 L. T. O. S. 327; 136 E. R. 945.

3743. ———.]—Declaration in covenant stated that pltf., by indenture dated Mar. 21, 1828, demised certain premises, from Mar. 25, then instant, for & during the term of seven years next ensuing, wanting seven days, to debt., yielding & paying therefore yearly & every year, during said term, the yearly rent of £285, by four equal quarterly payments, on Mar. 25, June 24, Sept. 29, & Dec. 25, in every year, commencing from said Mar. 25, then instant, & that debt. covenanted to pay rent accordingly, but that in breach thereof, in the last year of the term, he had only paid half of the rent, & that on Mar. 25, 1836, there was due £140 for two quarterly payments. Debt. pleaded payment into ct., of the first quarter, & demurred generally to the insufficiency of the alleged breach of covenant, in respect of the last quarterly payment, on the ground that it appeared on the face of the declaration that the second quarter's rent, mentioned in the breach, did not become due "during the term" as stipulated in the covenant. The ct. gave judgment for pltf. construing the covenant to be for payment of a beforehand rent, the first quarter being payable on Mar. 25, 1828, the day of the commencement of the term, so that the whole rent was payable within the term.—HOPKINS v. HELMORE (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 463; 3 Nev. & P. K. B. 453; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 380; 7 L. J. Q. B. 195; 2 Jur. 856; 112 E. R. 914.

It also contained provisions by reference to another lease, whereby it was provided that one year's rent, in that case a fixed rent, should always be payable in advance on demand. The lessee having been, on July 1, 1879, let into possession, paid rent quarterly up to Jan. 1881. On Mar. 13, 1882 the lessor served the lessee with notice of a demand for a year's rent in advance, reckoned at 30s. a loom upon all the looms he was then working, being five hundred & sixty in number:—Held: upon the construction of the agreement, the intention was to fix a minimum dead rent of 30s. upon five hundred & forty looms & to that extent, namely, £10, the lessor was entitled to demand a year's rent in advance, but not beyond.—*WALSH v. 3759. — Payment on account at request of lessor.—A tenant having made payments to his landlord, & also advances at his request to a firm of which he was a member, on account, as the tenant alleged, of rent not then due:—Held: if the advances were made on account of the rent, they were an answer to an action for the rent by the landlord's exors.—NASH v. GRAY (1861), 2 F. & F. 391, N. P.

3760. — Effect of assignment of reversion.—R. having leased his land to pltf. at a rent payable quarterly, subsequently mortgaged the land to defts., who allowed B. to remain in receipt of the rent. Subsequently to the mtge., B. applied to pltf., who was not aware of the mtge., to pay him a year's rent in advance, & pltf. did so. After the payment, & before the rent had become due, defts. gave notice to pltf. to pay the rent to them, pltf. refusing to pay it, defts. distrained for it:—Held: in an action for an illegal distress, payment of the rent before it became due was not a good payment as against defts., the mtgees., & pltf. was still liable to pay them the rent.

Payment of rent before it is due is not a fulfilment of the obligation imposed by the covenant to pay rent, but is, in fact, an advance to the landlord, with an agreement that on the day when the rent becomes due such advance shall be treated as a fulfilment of the obligation to pay the rent. The receipt of the rent could not be treated here as a discharge by the landlord, because by assigning the reversion before the rent was received by him he had parted with the power of giving such a discharge (WILLES, J.).—DE NICHOLLS v. SAUNDERS (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 589; 39 L. J. C. P. 297; 22 L. T. 661; 18 W. R. 1100.

3761. ——In July, 1864, L. demised premises to deft. for five years at a rent of £55 per annum payable quarterly. Immediately after the grant of the lease, deft. advanced to L. £170 on account of rent; & in Sept. 1865, L. mortgaged the premises to pltf.

In May 1866, B., who claimed under a prior mtge. from L. dated in Sept. 1858, through C. his attorney commenced an action of ejectment against deft. to recover possession of the premises, but did not proceed with it; & on Nov. 1, 1866, pltf.'s attorney wrote to deft.: "Mr. C. has written to say his clients are no longer entitled to receive your rent. I therefore request that you will have the kindness to pay the same here by Monday next":—Held: the prepayment of rent was no bar to pltf.'s claim to the rent accruing after deft. had notice that pltf. was grantee of the reversion; & the above letter, coupled with the circumstances known to deft. that he was raising money by mortgaging his reversion, & that pltf.'s claim for rent could hardly be founded upon any other alleged right than one resulting from a grant of the reversion, would warrant a jury in inferring that deft. had notice that pltf. was such grantee.—COOK v. GUERRA (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 132; 41 L. J. C. P. 89; 26 L. T. 97; 20 W. R. 367.

3762. — Payment after registration of writ of elegit against landlord—Tenant without notice.—After the registration by a judgment creditor of writs of elegit, but before the appointment of a receiver, the judgment debtor, whose land was subject to a legal mtge., entered into an arrangement with a tenant by which the tenant paid him rent in advance. The judgment creditor obtained the appointment of a receiver before the rent became due. The tenant made the arrangement bona fide & without notice of the judgment creditor's claim:—Held: the arrangement was not binding on the judgment creditor, & he was entitled to payment of the rent by the tenant.—ASHBURTON (LORD) v. NOCTON, [1915] 1 Ch. 274; 84 L. J. Ch. 193; 111 L. T. 895; 31 T. L. R. 122; 59 Sol. Jo. 145, C. A.

3763. Whether lessee estopped from denying lease.—Dft. was tenant to A. of premises of which A. agreed, in writing, to grant a long lease to pltf., subject to certain conditions. Dft. thereupon paid the next quarter's rent to pltf.; the agreement was not carried into effect, & A. gave deft. notice to pay the next quarter's rent to him as before:—Held: in an action brought by pltf. for the next quarter's use & occupation, deft. was not estopped from showing by these facts, that all parties were remitted to their original rights.—BROOK v. BIGGS (1836), 2 Bing. N. C. 572; 1 Hodg. 462; 2 Scott, 803; 5 L. J. C. P. 143; 132 E. R. 223.

The term of one thousand years was created for the securing a sum of £3,000, & was at the time of such settlement vested in two trustees, one of whom was A., the tenant for life. In exercise of the leasing power, A. granted a lease of the farm for three lives, under which lease pltf. became tenant, subject to the rent thereby reserved, & which rent was paid by

B. & C. afterwards distrained for rent as due to them; whereupon pltf. brought replevin, & a case was stated by the county ct. judge for the opinion of this ct.:—Held: as the term of one thousand years had, as to one moiety, merged in A. & B., & C. had therefore a right to distrain for a moiety of the rent, the effect of the representation by R. & D. would not stop B. & C. from recovering rent which pltf. had not paid in consequence of such representation, or had not made himself liable to pay under the judgment obtained against him by S.—WHITE v. 3779. — Effect as to right of re-entry.]—An agreement for a three years' tenancy of certain premises was entered into on Dec. 19, 1907, to run from Dec. 25, 1907, at a rental of £60 per annum. The agreement contained a proviso for re-entry if any part of the rent should be in arrear for fourteen days. The rent due on Dec. 25, 1908, was not paid. On Jan. 18, 1909, the reversion of the premises was assigned to pltf., & on Feb. 16, there was an assignment to pltf. of the benefit of the agreement of Dec. 19, 1907, & of the rent which had accrued due on Dec. 25, 1908. The rent which accrued due on Mar. 25, 1909, not having been paid, pltf. commenced an action in the county ct. under County Courts

Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 139, to recover possession of the premises & also the six months' rent in arrear, without having previously distrained. Evidence was given by a person who went over the premises at deft.'s request that there was not sufficient distress on the premises to satisfy pltf.'s claim for rent. The county ct. judge found as facts that six months' rent was in arrear, & that there was no sufficient distress on the premises, & held that it was not a condition precedent to proceeding under County Courts Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 139, that a distress should have been put in & proved to be insufficient; that the agreement, though void in law under Real Property Act, 1845 (c. 100), s. 3, not being under seal, must be construed as a valid lease to which Conveyancing & Law of Property Act, 1881, (c. 41), s. 10 applied, & that pltf., as assignee of the reversion under that section, had a right of re-entry notwithstanding that six months' rent in arrear accrued due partly before & partly after the date of the assignment:—Held: the decision of the county ct. judge was right.—RICKETT v. Assignee for value—Whether authority revocable.]—A customer, in July, borrowed £200 from his bankers, upon the terms of a verbal agreement that the loan should be repaid out of the rent of a farm which would become due to him at Michaelmas. The money was advanced by the bankers, & the customer then gave them a letter addressed by him to the tenant of the farm, by which he authorised & requested the tenant, when his Michaelmas rent became due, to pay £200 to the bankers. The letter contained no reference to the loan, & did not show that any consideration had been given for the authority. The bankers sent the letter to the tenant. The customer was adjudicated a bkpt. upon an act of bkpcy. committed in Aug.:—Held: as the rent was an interest in land, the agreement was one which, by Stat. Frauds, s. 4, could not be proved by parol evidence & therefore the letter could alone be looked at: & the letter amounted only to a revocable authority to pay the rent to the bankers, & it was revoked by the bkpcy.—Re WHITTING, Ex p. HALL (1879), 10 Ch. The ordinary course was where a party was in possession, & a receiver was appointed to direct either a delivery up of possession to the receiver, or that an occupation rent might be set. It was true that the order, as such orders always did, directed that the tenants should attorn & pay arrears, rents, etc., to the receiver (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—RANDFIELD v. RANDFIELD (1859), 7 W. 3786. ——— By way of equitable execution—Subject to rights of prior incumbrancer.]—A person who is prejudiced by the conduct of a receiver appointed in an action by way of equitable execution, ought not without leave of the ct. to commence a fresh action to restrain the proceedings of the receiver, even though the act complained of was beyond the scope of the receiver's authority; but ought to make an application for such relief as he is entitled to in the action in which the receiver was appointed.

With respect to the first question, I am of opinion that what was done by the receiver was wrong. He was appointed without prejudice to the rights of prior incumbrancers, & he ought not to have taken possession as against S. His first notice recites correctly the order appointing him receiver, & he knew that pltf. was a prior incumbrancer, & yet he gives notice to the tenants to pay their rents to him. This notice would entirely prevent any reasonable tenant from paying his rent to S. who as mtgee. in possession, was entitled to receive it. That being so, I think the proceedings of the receiver were wrong & were in violation of his duty & of the rights of the present pltf. (COTTON, L.J.).—SEARLE v. CHOAT (1884), 25 Ch. D. 723; 53 L. 3812. —.]—Another class of cases, which I will mention, are cases of rents. Rent is reserved in some cases generally, & then the proper place for the payment, the place appointed by law, is the land out of which it issues. In some cases it is expressly made payable at some other place; & yet, in either case, is there a precedent, either in debt on the reddendum, or in covenant, of an averment, that pltf. was at the time & place to demand it. m. *Damages recovered—Remedy exhausted.]—*The tenant of a farm, sued by his landlord for arrears of rent, claimed & obtained in the action an award of damages against the landlord years at a specified rent, as soon as it was ready for use. The building co. made default in completing the hotel, but on its subsequent completion deft. accepted a lease for the stipulated term without prejudice to any claim for damages for breach of the agreement. The co., who had obtained a head lease of ninety-nine years from the freeholder, mortgaged the same to plffs. In an action by them, as mtgees. in possession, against deft., for arrears of rent accrued since the date of the mtge. deft. sought to set off a claim for damages in respect of the co.'s default in not completing the hotel by the specified time, & alleged that the mtge. was taken by plffs., with full notice & knowledge of that claim:—Held: inasmuch as the right attempted to be set off was not an interest in land but merely a claim for damages for breach of a personal covenant, the claim to set off could not be allowed; & cases as to set-off by an assignee of a chose in action had no application to the present case.—REEVES v. POPE, [1914] 2 K. B. 284; 83 L. J. K. B. 771; 110 L. T. 503; 58 Sol. Jo. 248, C. A.

3844. Claim in respect of distress—Goods sold at too low a price.—In an action for rent:—Semble: it is no answer that the landlord has distrained goods for it to the full value of the rent, if he has sold them for a less sum; if he has sold them at too low a price, the tenant's remedy is by action.—*EFFORD v. A breach of this duty is however no answer to a claim for rent, but is a matter for cross action.—HART v. ROGERS, [1916] 1 K. B. 646; 85 L. J. K. B. 273; 114 L. T. 329; 32 T. L. R. 150.

B. had in his hands a greater amount due to A. in right of his wife than the rent amounted to:—Held: this could not be set off against the rent without a special agreement to that effect.—WILLSON v. DAVENPORT (1833), 5 C. & P. 521, N. P.

3852. Expenditure on improvements—In anticipation of grant of lease.—The tenant of a farm, contemplating taking a lease, & pending negotiations for the same, being desirous of carrying out certain improvements of thatching & draining, & anxious as to repayment for them, wrote to her landlord thus "I should feel obliged if you would send us a rough draft of the agreement at your earliest convenience, as I do not feel comfortable to proceed with the necessary improvements of thatching the barn, draining the land, etc., without some little assurance from you that we are acting safely." The landlord replied as follows: "I will send you a copy of the lease next week, & trust you will make yourself comfortable as to the thatching of the barn & the draining, etc. I will pay for the thatching & draining if we do not come to terms, but as the covenants will not be unusual, I trust there will be no necessity for that." The tenant, who was under notice from the landlord to quit at the end of the half-year, declined continuing tenant of the farm. The landlord on the determination of the tenancy brought his action for the half-year's rent. The tenant pleaded by way of set-off, the money she had paid for thatching & draining, & paid into ct. the balance of the landlord's claim:—Held: on the interpretation of the correspondence, deft. was entitled to set off, against plff.'s claim for rent, the money she had so expended on the said improvements.—CLEGHORN v. DURRANT (1858), 31 L. T. O. S. 235; 22 J. P. 419.

3853. Agreement for set-off—Subsequent devise of premises subject to rent—Whether right of set-off passes to devisees.—By a deed of even date with a lease the lessor covenanted that the lessee should retain part of each year's rent until satisfaction of a debt due from the lessor to the lessee:—Held: (1) though the covenant might be pleaded at law as a release pro tanto of the rent, this was only to avoid circuity of action, & the covenant was not for all purposes a release; (2) the lessee having specifically bequeathed the premises subject to the rent, as between the

for his failure to implement certain obligations under the lease:—Held: the tenant, having obtained damages, had exhausted his remedy, & could not retain the balance of the rent due on the plea that the landlord's failure to implement his part of the contract barred him from claiming rent.—CHRISTIE v. WILSON, [1915] S. C. 645.—SCOT.

3854. Effect of assignment of debt by tenant.]—Defts. bound themselves to plffs. by certain instruments, called Lloyd's Bonds, to pay certain sums of money & interest at the expiration of a year. A few days afterwards defts. granted plffs. a lease. Plffs. then assigned away the said bonds. In an action brought by plffs. for the benefit of the assignees on the said bonds, defts. claimed to be entitled to set off rent which accrued due under the lease after such assignment & notice thereof:—Held: defts. were not so entitled either at law or in equity.—WATSON v. MID WALES RY. CO. (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 593; 36 L. J. C. P. 285; 17 L. T. 94; 15 W. R. 1107.

D. Payments to Mortgagees.

3855. Payment in respect of arrears of interest.]—To an avowry for rent in arrear, plff. pleaded that before deft. had any interest in the lands, they were charged with a mtge. in fee, that the mtgor., who retained the possession after forfeiture of the land demised same to deft. for a term, who demised to plff. who entered into possession until the mtgee., there being an arrear of interest & also of rent due from plff. to deft., gave notice to the former to pay the portion of the rent, amounting to the arrear of the interest to him, & in default threatened to put the law in force, & was about to do so, to recover the arrear of interest, whereupon plff. necessarily paid the said sum to the mtgee., & so the rent was not in arrear to deft.; concluding with a verification:—Held: the plea was good, being in effect a plea of payment, & not of nil habuit in tenementis & it was correct in setting out the facts, & concluding with a verification.—JOHNSON v. JONES (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 809; 1 Per. & Dav. 651; 8 L. J. Q. B. 124; 112 E. R. 1421.

3856. —.]—A mtgor. let the mtged. premises subsequently to the mtge. During the quarter ending at Michaelmas the mtgees. gave a notice to the tenant informing him of the existence of the mtge., & that the principal sum was still due & owing together with an arrear of interest, & requiring him to pay the rent thereafter to accrue due to them. The rent which became due at Michaelmas being still unpaid, an order was made in an action against the mtgor. appointing plff., who had recovered judgment, receiver of the rents of the premises, “without prejudice to the rights of any prior incumbrancers who may think proper to take possession of the same by virtue of their respective securities.” Subsequently the mtgees. threatened the tenant with legal proceedings unless he paid the rent to them, & the tenant thereupon paid them the quarter's rent due at Michaelmas. The receiver claimed payment of such rent from the tenant:—Held: the tenant had not been guilty of any disobedience of the receivership order in paying rent to the mtgees., they being prior incumbrancers whose rights were reserved by the order; the tenant, having paid the rent to the mtgees. under compulsion of law & in consequence of his lessor's default, could set up such payment in answer to the claim for the rent by the receiver, who claimed through his lessor; & consequently the claim of the receiver could not be maintained.—UNDERHAY v. READ (1887), 20 Q. B. D. 209; 57 L. J. Q. B. 129; 58 L. T. 457; 36 W. R. 298; 4 T. L. R. 188, C. A.

3857. Payment in excess of interest.]—(1) A. was seised in fee of a house & two acres of land, which he had let to B. A. mortgaged this property to C. in fee, & it was arranged between A., B., & C. that B. should pay the amount of the interest on the mtge. to C., & the residue of the rent to A. After this C. gave notice to B. to pay the whole rent to him. B. did so:—Held: by reason of the arrangement, B. was not justified in so doing; but if there had been no such arrangement it would have been otherwise.

(2) A. was seised in fee of nine acres of land charged with legacies, for which there was a power of distraining. A. let the land to B., & the legatees assigned their legacies to C. who gave notice to B. to pay the rent to him:—Held: B. was not justified in so doing upon a notice only, although he would have been under the threat of a distress.—WHITMORE v. WALKER (1848), 2 Car. & Kir. 615.

3858. To whom available — Underlessee — Though payment made by lessee.]—In 1796, H. demised to S. for sixty-eight years, premises which in 1793 had been mortgaged to F. S. assigned to N., who underlet to D. In 1818, H. conveyed the premises in fee to R. N., who was also agent of H., paid the interest on the mtge. to F. from 1816 to 1820 to the amount of the rent reserved. R. distrained for rent in 1820:—Held: D., who replevied at the instigation of N., might, under the plea of riens in arriere, avail himself of these payments.—DYER v. BOWLEY (1824), 2 Bing. 94; 9 Moore, C. P. 196; 2 L. J. O. S. C. P. 129; 130 E. R. 240.

E. Payments in respect of Party Walls.

3859. General rule.]—In debt for rent against an administrator, as assignee of the intestate, deft. pleaded, in discharge of his liability otherwise than as administrator, that the intestate underlet, for an unexpired term, to a tenant who had become insolvent & unable to pay rent; that the premises were of less value than the rent, viz. of the value of a certain sum, part of which deft. had paid to plff., & part towards the expense of a party wall under Fire Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774 (c. 78); that, before the rent became due, deft. offered to surrender all his interest in the premises to plff., who refused to accept them; & that he had fully administered, etc. Replication; that the premises were of more value than the sum mentioned in the plea, viz. of the value of the rent; & that deft. did not offer to surrender, etc. Issue thereon:—Held: (1) the real value of the premises, as against deft., must be taken to be that which it would have been if he had not himself committed a breach of a covenant to repair in the original lease; (2) the value, as between pltf. & deflt., was not affected by the insolvency of the undertenant, whose lease also contained a covenant to repair with a proviso of re-entry for breach & for non-payment of rent.

(3) Another question was raised as to a sum paid in respect to a party wall; but we do not think deflt. entitled to deduct that sum at all, & even if he were entitled, he could not do so, without pleading either a set-off or payment (DENMAN, C.J.).—*HORNIDGE v. Rates irregularly assessed—Paid at lessor's direction.]—If a landlord direct a tenant, who is overseer of the poor, to pay on the landlord's account, rates irregularly assessed on him, & promises that the levies shall eat out the rents, the tenant may set them off, or prove them as payment, in an action for use & occupation.—

3869. Acknowledgment rent for right of way—Paid under provision in lease.]—Avowry for rent due on a demise at £40 per annum. Pleas in bar; non tenuit modo et formā; as to a part of the rent, that it was not due. Pltf. held under a lease, reserving £40 per annum in the body thereof; but, before the lease was executed, the following words were added, between which & the body of the lease the signatures were written. "The allowance of the road to the Six Bells' Yard to be made as usual." It had been usual for the lessor to allow the lessee £5 per annum for so much annually paid by the lessee to a third party for the use of such road to the demised premises:—Held: this did not reduce the reservation to £35 per annum, so as to entitle pltf. to a verdict on the plea of non tenuit. Qu.: whether a payment made under this memorandum would have been evidence under the plea of riens in arriere.—DAVIES v. 3870. Premium paid to lessor—Recoverable by lessee under Stamp Acts.]—To debt for rent due on a lease, deft. pleaded, set-off for money had & received. Pltf. had granted to deft. a prior lease at a certain rent, & at a premium of £40, & being indebted to deft. for work done to that amount, it was agreed on a settlement of accounts that the work done should be treated as payment of the premium; but the premium was not expressed in the lease. Deft. sought to set off the premium thus paid, on the ground that he was entitled by Probate & Legacy Duties Act, 1808 (c. 149), s. 24, to recover it by reason of its not having been expressed in the prior lease:—Held: (1) the effect of Stamp Act, 1815 (c. 184), was to put leases on the same footing as conveyances, under Probate & Legacy Duties Act, 1808 (c. 149), & to make it necessary to state the premium or consideration in the lease; (2) the transaction amounted to money paid by deft. to pltf., & it might be recovered back in an action for money had & received by virtue of Probate & Legacy Duties Act, 1808 (c. 149), s. 24, & therefore might be set off.—GINGELL v. 3871. — Lessee let into possession but lease not taken up—Claim by lessor by use & occupation.]—Pltf. agreed to let to deft. a house at a certain rent, a premium to be paid on the completion of the lease. Deft. was let into possession & paid part of the premium. He subsequently refused to take the lease, owing to some difference about the terms of the agreement. Pltf. sued for use & occupation of the premises. Deft. pleaded set-off:—Held: he was not entitled to set off the part of the premium he had paid, as there had not been an entire failure of consideration.—COLTON v. DORRELL (1869), 17 W. The assignees elected not to adopt the agreement for the lease, but refused to deliver up possession to the landlord, unless he allowed them the sum which bkpt. had expended on the buildings:—Held: as both the written & verbal agreement between the landlord & bkpt. contemplated a continuance of the tenancy, which the assignees had themselves repudiated, they had no lien on the premises for the money expended by bkpt.—Re RYLAND, Ex p. 3876. —[j]—In 1811, W., being possessed of certain premises under leases which would expire at Midsummer, 1854, granted to T. & E. respectively, an annuity of £222 4s. 5d. for three lives, to secure which he granted to each of them an underlease of the same premises for forty-three years, if the lives, or survivor of them, should so long endure. In 1827, the premises in the annuity deeds mentioned were assigned to pltf. for the residue of the terms granted to W., subject to the annuities to T. & E., & to the underleases for securing the same. In 1825 T. & E. were let into possession of the premises so underlet to them; & in 1830, pltf. became tenant to them of part of the premises at the rent of £550, payable to them in equal moieties. T., the last survivor of the cestuis que vie in his annuity deed, died in 1851; & from the time of his death, down to the time of the expiration of the leases granted to W., D., as their agent, applied for & received the rent of £550 from pltf. for them & the representative of E., & accounted for a moiety to each of them—deducting certain payments thereout in respect of ground rent, rates, taxes, insurance, repairs, & commission:—Held: pltf. was entitled, in an action for money had & received, to recover back the sums so paid by him under the mistaken impression that the right to receive them still continued deducting only the sums paid by the agent in respect of ground rent, rates & taxes.—*BARBER v. Ground rent in respect of premises disclaimed paid by underlessee.—In 1840, A. being lessee of a warehouse & cellar under a demise from B., & also lessee under C. of other adjoining property, comprising (inter alia), a vault, D. became tenant from year to year to A. of the warehouse, & cellar, & vault, at an annual rent of £185, made up of £140, for the warehouse & cellar, & £45 for the vault. On Oct. 27, 1845, A. became bkpt., £92 10s. being at that time due as rent from D. to bkpt. The assignees, upon being appointed, elected to take the property held under B.; & on Feb. 26, 1846, elected not to take the property held under C. At Christmas, 1845, rent to the amount of £144 7s. 6d. became due from A. to C. for which amount, on Feb. 19, 1846, C. distrained upon the goods in the vault held by D., who, to relieve himself of that distress, paid that sum to C. An action having subsequently been brought by the assignees of A. against D. to recover the above sum of £92 10s. & £35 for a quarter's rent due at Christmas for the warehouse & cellar:—Held: (1) D. was not entitled to set off the sum so paid by him to C.; (2) pltf. could well sue for the quarter's rent due since bkpcy. in their representative character as assignees.—*GRAHAM v. 3887. —.]—(1) An eviction by a landlord of his tenant, from a part of the demised premises, creates a suspension of the entire rent during the continuance of the eviction; but the tenancy is not thereby put an end to; nor is the tenant thereby discharged from the performance of his covenants other than the covenant for the payment of rent.

Where, therefore, in assumpsit by a landlord against his tenant for breach of a promise to use the premises in a tenant-like manner during the continuance of the tenancy, the latter pleaded, that, during the continuance of the tenancy, & before any breach, the former entered upon part of the premises & evicted him therefrom, & that he thereupon relinquished & gave up, & the landlord had & thence hitherto retained the possession of, the residue of the premises:—Held: the plea was bad, inasmuch as it did not show a dissolution of the tenancy, by mutual consent.

(2) A further plea stated, that, during the tenancy, & before any breach, the premises, & deft.'s estate & interest therein, were duly surrendered to pltf. by act & operation of law, that is to say, by deft.'s then quitting the same premises, & every part thereof, with the licence & consent of pltf., & relinquishing the possession thereof to pltf., with the intention of putting an end to the tenancy, & by pltf.'s then accepting such possession, with the intention of putting an end to the same tenancy:—Held: if the tenancy continued up to the time of the arrangement stated in the plea, such arrangement would not enure as a surrender by act & operation of law; & it was a valid objection to the plea, on special demurrer, that it amounted only to an argumentative denial that there had been any breach during the tenancy.—MORRISON v. CHADWICK (1849), 7 C. B. 266; 6 Dow. & L. 567; 18 L. J. C. P. 189; 13 Jur. 638; 137 E. R. 107; sub nom. MORRIS v. CHADWICK, 13 L. T. O. S. 208.

Deft. pleaded that pltf. had ploughed a field parcel of the warren, by which the conies had not sufficient pasture:—Held: no plea, for it is not a rent, but a seignory in gross due by reason of the contract, by which the entry or user of that part is no suspension.—ANON. (1597), Noy, 60; 74 E. R. 1028.

3889. —.]—*Not to accrued rent.]—*To a declaration in debt by A. against B. for £191 5s. due for two

& a half years' rent under a demise, by indenture, B. pleaded as to £40 10s., parcel, etc., that, before the making of the indenture, A. conveyed parcel of the demised premises to C., in fee, who devised the same to D., his wife, & E. & their heirs; that, after the commencement of the suit, D. & E., "gave notice to B. of their title, & required him to pay them such portion of the rent, not paid over to pltf. at the time of the giving of the said notice, as might, on a just apportionment, be found to be the just proportional part thereof in respect of the said parcel of the demised premises; & D. & E. then gave notice to, & threatened B., that if he should neglect or refuse forthwith to pay over such proportional part to D. & E., they would immediately eject & expel him from the said parcel; that the said sum of £40 10s. was the sum which, upon a just apportionment of the said rent, would be, & was, the proportional part of the rent in respect of the said parcel, & was at the time of the notice unpaid to A.; that the rent sued for, accrued & became due after the death of C.; that, if B. had not paid the £40 10s. to D. & E., they would have proceeded to eject & expel deft. from the said parcel of the demised premises, wherefore P., after the commencement of the suit, necessarily & unavoidably paid them that sum; & that A. never had any thing in the said parcel of the demised premises, except as appeared in that plea:

—Held: this was neither a good plea of eviction, the notice being subsequent to the rent becoming due; nor a good plea of payment, inasmuch as the alleged payment was not in satisfaction of any charge upon the land or of any debt due from A.—BOODLE v. CAMBELL (1844), 2 Dow. & L. 66; 7 Man. & G. 386; 8 Scott, N. R. 104; 13 L. J. C. P. 142; 3 L. T. O. S. 102; 8 Jur. 475; 135 E. R. 161.

The county ct. judge, on objection made that question of title arose, without inquiring whether deft. went out of possession voluntarily or was evicted, dismissed the case on that ground:—Held: the duty of the county ct. judge was to have gone further, before he dismissed the case, & have ascertained whether deft. went out voluntarily or by compulsion; if voluntarily, then deft. was estopped from setting up the title of the third person, & the county ct. had jurisdiction; if evicted by compulsion, then, deft. was not so estopped, title came into question, & the jurisdiction of the county ct. was at an end.—Re EMERY & BARNETT (1858), 4 C. 3898. Intention to determine occupation necessary.]—A. demised, under separate leases, two separate tenements to B., with a covenant on the part of A. to insure the premises, & to rebuild in the event of their destruction by fire. B.

demised one of the tenements to C., & the other to D.; & during their respective tenancies the whole premises were destroyed by fire. The premises were afterwards rebuilt by A., pursuant to a new plan submitted to B., & approved of & signed by him. B., before the rebuilding, agreed to surrender the premises, & take a new lease of them in their altered state, which he afterwards did. The new buildings varied from the old ones, inasmuch as the area of C.'s premises was thereby decreased, & that of D.'s increased:—Held: B. was not entitled to recover against C. & D., as for use & occupation, the rent accruing after the period at which the rebuilding had arrived at such a stage as permanently to alter the character of the respective premises, the alterations in the subject-matter of the demises amounting to an eviction, to which he was a party.—*UPTON v. lease to his father; & the son did so, & paid rent. Pltf. repaired the premises at or about Michaelmas, 1861, & having afterwards discovered that deft., a daughter of A. had taken out letters of administration to his estate, & as such administratrix, claimed to hold the premises for the remainder of the term, pltf. sued her on the covenant to repair in one action, & in ejectment, as for a forfeiture for the non-repair, in another action, i.e., the present action. In the action of covenant, however, deft. paid money into ct., which pltf. took out in satisfaction, etc. There was no want of repair in the premises after pltf. had repaired them, & the rent due up to Michaelmas, 1861, was paid by A.'s son, & received by pltf., before either action was commenced.—Held: in the ejectment either the rent so paid was to be taken as a satisfaction of the rent due under the lease, & so the acceptance of it to operate as a waiver of the forfeiture, or there had been an eviction of deft. by pltf., which prevented his taking advantage of a forfeiture for non-repair during the eviction.—PELLATT v. to perform covenants, etc., & a plea of a performance need only answer the indenture substantially & to a common intent.—EMOTT v. COLE (1591), Cro. Eliz. 255; 78 E. R. 510.

3944. —.]—One K. demised land to H. for building, with a proviso for re-entry by K. in case of the non-completion of the houses contracted to be built thereon by a given time. H. demised one of the houses to ptlf. for one year certain, with an agreement for a further lease, at a rent payable quarterly. Before any rent became due from ptlf. to H., K. re-entered, for a breach of the covenant of H. to complete the buildings within the time, & ptlf. was turned out of possession. Ptlf. subsequently took the house he formerly occupied under H., from K., upon a new agreement, under which he, after an interval of a few weeks, resumed possession:—Held: H. could not legally distrain the goods of ptlf. for rent subsequently accruing; & the eviction by the superior landlord might be given in evidence under the plea of non tenuit.—HOPCRAFT v. KEYS (1833), 9 Bing. 613; 2 Moo. & S. 760; 131 E. R. 744.

3945. Eviction must be lawful.]—In covenant for non-payment of rent reserved by a lease containing a clause prohibiting the carrying on of certain trades upon the demised premises without the licence of the lessor, deft. pleaded that his immediate lessor, who held under one C., subject to a similar covenant, gave him a licence to carry on one of those trades, & that, by reason & on the ground that deft. so carried on such trade, R. "having good right & title to the demised premises as heir-at-law of C.," evicted deft.:—Held: the plea not negating that the trade was carried on with the licence of the original lessor, did not disclose such right in R. to evict, as to afford an answer to ptlf.'s claim for rent.—SIMONS v. FARREN (1834), 1 Bing. N. C. 272; 1 Scott, 105; 4 L. J. C. P. 41; 131 E. R. 1121.

Plea, that, before the lease was made, one P. impleaded ptlfs., & had judgment of elegit against their lands, etc.; that the inquisition found ptlfs., seized of the demised premises then leased to B., subject to two mtges. for years; that the sheriff delivered the demised premises to P., to hold, etc., till his damages & costs should be levied thereout; that, before the rent became due, deft. was evicted by P., who entered, & then ejected, expelled, put out, & removed deft. therefrom, & kept & continued him so ejected, etc.; that £1,000 was still due to P. which was not levied. Replication traversed the eviction in the words of the plea. At the trial the lease, elegit, & inquisition, were put in, & it was proved that P. had called on deft. to pay him rent, or he, P., would turn him out, on which deft. attorned to him, without privity of ptlfs., his lessors:—Held: ptlfs. were entitled to recover, as P.'s elegit only entitled him to the reversion expectant on the mtges. by the lessors. The expulsion, as pleaded, was not established by the evidence.

Effect of eviction on collateral security for rent.]—A man under obligation to the Queen conveyed his land to H. who made a lease for years rendering rent & the lessee was bound to pay this rent. Now the lease was extended for the debt of the Queen:—Held: (1) the bond is saved although the rent is not paid, for the Queen came in with title paramount to the lease. So also if part of the rent or profit be extended the lessee need not pay more than the balance of rent to the lessor; (2) if the bond were for the payment of a sum in gross the extent would be no relief against the bond for the sum in gross did not issue out of the land.—PECKHAM'S CASE (1594), Sav. 132; 123 E. written agreement for this quarterly letting, made while 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, s. 4, was in force was put in which was signed by B. but not by A.:—Held: if a tenant had left a house unoccupied, & the landlord entered & was in the profitable occupation of the house, he could not recover rent from the tenant for any time after such profitable occupation; but if he merely put a person into the house to take care of it & prevent depredations, it would be otherwise.—*BIRD v. 3958. General rule—Apart from special provision in lease.]—(1) Where a party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself he is bound to make it good if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, since (2) he might have provided against it by his contract.

Therefore if a lessee expressly covenant to pay rent he ought to pay though (3) the house be burnt by lightning or (4) thrown down by enemies, nor (5) is he excused by reason of the fact that he is expelled from his lands by an alien enemy or (6) though the lands be inundated.

(7) He is equally liable though there is no express covenant since the rent is a duty created by the parties upon the reservation.—PARADINE v. JANE (1647), Aleyn, 26; Sty. 47; 82 E. R. 807.

He covenanted to repair, maintain, & keep the inside of the premises in good & tenantable repair & condition, & to deliver them up at the end of the term, damage by fire, storm, or tempest, or other inevitable accident, & reasonable wear and tear only excepted. Pltfs. covenanted to keep the walls, roof, & main timbers of the premises in good & substantial repair & condition. The lease also contained a provision for the suspension of the rent in the event of the premises being burnt down, or damaged by fire, storm, or tempest. Sub-lessees of deft. overloaded a floor with flour, in consequence of which the whole building fell. Pltfs. rebuilt it & sued for rent during the time the building was unoccupied, & for damages. Deft. denied liability, & claimed damages from pltfs. :—Held: (1) notwithstanding the fall, deft. was liable to pay the rent; (2) there was no implied warranty by pltfs. that the building was fit for the purpose for which it was to be used; (3) in the absence of notice to them of any damage or want of repair, pltfs. were not liable on their express covenant to keep the walls, roof, & main timbers of the building in repair; (4) on the authority of Saner v. Bilton, No. 4865, post, the destruction of the building, if caused by using the property demised in what was apparently a reasonable & proper manner, having regard to its character and to the purposes for which it was intended to be used, was not waste, & therefore the tenant would not be liable to pay damages for it; (5) as the case was not within the exceptions in his express covenant to repair, he was liable under it to the cost of putting the inside of the floors demised, & the fixtures therein in good & tenantable repair.—*MANCHESTER BONDED WAREHOUSE CO. v. A. In General.

See, generally, EQUITY, Vol. XX., pp. 280 et seq.; Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 190.

4013. General rule—Change of interest occasion for apportionment.]—Under a parol demise from year to year, by a tenant for life, with power to lease by deed, etc. & under written agreements for leases not exceeding three years, signed by the lessees, but not by the tenant for life, though witnessed by his agent, the interest of the lessees determines with the life of the lessor & the rents are apportionable.—SYMONS v. SYMONS & POWELL (1821), 6 Madd. 207; 56 E. R. 1070.

4014. ———.]—A settlor, by deed, assigned securities to trustees upon trust after his, the settlor's, death, during the minority of A. to pay such portion of the income as they should think proper, for the maintenance & education of A.; & when A. should have attained the age of twenty-one, & thenceforth until he should attain thirty, by & out of the income to pay to A. such annual sum as they should in their discretion think proper, not exceeding £5,000, & accumulate the unapplied portion, & stand possessed of the accumulations upon the trusts thereafter declared concerning the fund; & upon further trust, when & so soon as A. should have attained thirty, to stand possessed of the funds & the annual produce thereof, upon trust that they & he shall pay unto & permit "A." & his assigns to receive & take the whole of the dividends, interest, & annual produce of the same, during his life, for his & their own use & benefit," with limitations over. Upon A. attaining thirty:—Held: there must be an apportionment of the current dividends.

Wherever a person is in receipt of rents & profits & any change takes place whereby that person's interest ceases or is altered, & another interest begins or a change of interest takes place, then an apportionment must be made (BACON, V.-C.).—*DONALDSON v. B. Between What Persons.

4017. Rector & succeeding incumbent.]—Lease for years by a rector having ceased by his death, the succeeding incumbent received from the lessee a sum of money as the rent due for the whole year, in the course of which the lessor died. 4018. Joint lessors—Whole rent reserved to one by mistake.]—A. B. was the first mtgee. of Blackacre, & C. D. was the first mtgee. of Whiteacre & the second mtgee. of Blackacre. A. B. & C. D. demised both properties together, reserving the whole rent to A. B. The parties did not seem to have observed the distinction between their rights in respect of the two properties. The ct. relieved C. D. from the mistake, by ordering A. B. to pay him an apportionment of the whole rent in respect of Whiteacre.

In 1841, A. mtged. a wharf to B., & covenanted to lay out the insurance money in rebuilding the premises. A fire occurred in 1844, & A., having in 1845 purchased an adjoining slip of land, laid out the money in building, partly on both parcels. In 1846 A. mtged. the slip to C. who had notice of the first mtge. The claim of B. to have the benefit of the expenditure of the insurance money on the slip was rejected by the ct.—*HARRYMAN v. 4019. Construction of Act—"Instrument"—Whether instrument creating life interest or instrument reserving rent.]—The "instrument" referred to in Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), is not the instrument creating the periodical payments, but that creating a life interest therein.

Testator died in 1838, having by his will, given real estates to trustees, in trust, after keeping up his mansion, etc., to pay five-eighths of the net rents to his widow for life. The widow died in 1847, & rents were receivable on the next rent day, under leases created by testator anterior to Apportionment Act:—Held: the rents were apportionable.—*KNIGHT v. 4020. — “Assign”—Whether mortgagee not in possession included.]—A mtgee. who is not in possession is not an assign of the mtgor. within Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), s. 2.

M., the tenant for life of real estate, granted to W., in consideration of an antecedent debt of £8,000, a yearly rentcharge of £960, to be issuing out of the estate for a term of one hundred years, if M. should so long live, with powers of entry & distress in the event of the rentcharge falling into arrear; & M. also demised the estate for a term of two hundred years, if he should so long live, to a trustee upon trust for the better securing the rentcharge. M. died when the rentcharge was in arrear, but before W. or the trustee had entered on the estate:—Held: W. was not entitled to be paid the arrears of the rentcharge out of the apportioned part of the rents for the period which elapsed between the quarter day last preceding M.'s death & the day on which he died.—*Re ANGLESEY'S (MARQUIS) ESTATE, PAGET v. —See, now, Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35).

4022. Application of Act—Landlord determining tenancy by his own act.]—Pltf. agreed with F. to let him land on a building lease for ninety-eight years from Christmas 1835, at a peppercorn rent for three years, & than at £115 a year, payable quarterly; F. to build on the land & cover in eight messuages within the first three years, & to accept a lease, etc.; proviso for re-entry on default. F. entered, but did not build the houses; whereupon pltf. brought ejectment, & recovered possession on June 12, 1839. The demise in the ejectment was laid on Jan. 1, 1839:—Held: (1) pltf. could not, in assumpsit against F. on the agreement, recover rent from Dec. 25 to Jan. 1; for, semble: Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), s. 2, as to apportionment of rents, does not apply to the case of a landlord determining the relation of landlord & tenant by his own act; (2) if it did, no rent was due here, the re-entry taking effect from the day of the demise, & having therefore put an end to the tenancy before a quarter's rent accrued; but the remedy was by action for mesne profits.

(3) After re-entry, pltf. agreed with a new tenant to let him the premises for the residue of F.'s term, at a peppercorn for the year ending Midsummer, 1840, £70 for the year ending Midsummer 1841, & £140 a year for the rest of the term. Pltf., in the above action, claimed, as damages, the difference between the rent which he would actually receive down to Midsummer 1841, & that which would have accrued down to the same period if F. had kept his agreement:—Held: the jury were not bound to award that amount, but might give their verdict on an estimate of pltf.'s real damage, taking into consideration the increased rent secured to him by the second agreement.—OLDERSHAW v. HOLT (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 590; 1 Arn. & H. 1; 4 Per. & Dav. 307; 10 L. J. Q. B. 221; 4 Jur. 1012; 113 E. R. 935.

4023. — Successive interests created before Act—Date of lease immaterial.]—Testator, whose will came into operation before the passing of Apportionment Act, 1834 (c. 22), gave the rents of his real estates to his son after he should attain the age of twenty-one years, & directed personal estate to be invested in funds or securities, with power to invest in land. The son attained the age of twenty-one in July:—Held: he was entitled to receive the whole of the rents which became due in Sept. on the devised estates & on the purchased estates, without regard to the date of the leases under which the rents became payable.—*FLETCHER v. Rent reserved by a lease granted after the Act, under a power in a settlement executed before the Act:—Held: to be apportionable between the exors. of the tenant for life under the settlement & the remainderman.—PLUMMER v. WHITELEY (1859), John. 585; 29 L. J. Ch. 247; 1 L. T. 230; 5 Jur. N. S. 1416; 8 W. R. 120; 70 E. R. 553.

Apportionment Act was passed in 1834. After 1834 A., under his power, granted leases of divers portions of the settled property. A. died in 1849:—Held: A.'s personal estate was entitled to a proportion of the rents of the lands of which he had granted leases under his power, between the last days of payment of rent & his death.—*LOCK v. SUB-SECT. 2.—AS BETWEEN LANDLORD AND TENANT.

A. In General.

4035. At common law—No apportionment in respect of time—Tenancy at will.]—If II. holds land at will rendering rent quarterly the lessor may determine his will when he pleases; but if he determines it within a quarter he shall lose the rent which should have been paid for that quarter. So the lessee may determine when he pleases, but then he must pay the quarter's rent (HOLT, C.J.).—LEIGHTON v. THEED (1701), 2 Salk. 413; 1 Ld. Raym. 707; 91 E. R. 359; sub nom. LAYTON v. FIELD, Holt, K. B. 415; 3 Salk. 222.

4036. ————.]—Tenant for life leases for years, rendering rent half-yearly, & dies in the middle of the half-year; equity will not apportion the rent, as to time.—JENNET v. MORGAN (1717), 1 P. Wms. 392; 24 E. R. 439, L. C.

4037. ————.]—Suppose a tenant for life makes a lease for years & dies the day before the rent is due, the rent is lost both to the exor. & the reversioner, & the law being so, equity will not relieve, though it seems a hard case (per CUR.).—HAY v. PALMER (1728), 2 P. Wms. 501; 24 E. R. 835.

Annotation:—Mentd. Reynish v. Martin (1746), 3 Atk. 330.

4038. ————.]—With respect to [the] argument that the rent may be apportioned, there is in Viner's Abridgment, title Apportionment, a long list of instances in which the rent may be apportioned; but they all relate to cases in which there has been some division of the land into distinct portions. There is no instance in which the apportionment is made in respect of time (LITTLEDALE, J.).—SLACK v. SHARPE (1838), 8 Ad. & El. 366; 3 Nev. & P. K. B. 390; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 496; 7 L. J. Q. 4042. — Rent accrued due before application of Act—Rent payable in advance.]—Pltf. let a house to deft. at a yearly rent payable quarterly in advance. By the terms of the agreement, if the rent should be in arrear for fourteen days, or on breach by deft. of any of the clauses of the agreement, pltf. was to be at liberty to re-enter on giving notice. A quarter's rent being in arrear, pltf. gave the required notice, & re-entered. In an action to recover the unpaid rent:—Held: Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35), does not apply to rent, annuities, dividends, & other payments in the nature of income, which have accrued due before the happening of the event by reason of which it is proposed to apply the Act; the Act, therefore, does not apply to rent payable in advance; & pltf. was entitled to recover the whole amount.—ELLIS v. ROWBOTHAM, [1900] 1 Q. B. 740; 69 L. J. Q. B. 379; 82 L. T. 191; 48 W. R. 423; 16 T. L. R. 258, C. A.

4043. — Whether due date affected.]—This was a creditor's petition for the winding up of a co., petitioner being the landlord of the co.'s premises. The lease of the premises reserved rent payable on the usual quarter days, & the alleged debt upon which petitioner based his claim for a winding-up order was the proportion of rent calculated at the rate of £1,850 per annum from Christmas last to the date of the presentation of the petition, although the quarter's rent due from Christmas would not be actually payable till Lady Day next:—Held: Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35), which provides that rent shall, like interest on money lent, be considered as accruing from day to day, does not alter the date at which it becomes due.—Re UNITED CLUB & HOTEL CO., LTD. (1889), 60 L. T. 665; 5 T. L. R. 368; 1 Meg. 186.

4044. — Release by will of rent "due."]—A testator directed his exors. "to forgive to my tenant all rent or arrears of rent which may be due & owing from him at the time of my decease." The rent was due at Lady Day & Michaelmas. Testator died in Feb.:—Held: the effect of the clause in the will was to forgive to the tenant the rent due at the quarter day preceding testator's death, & Apportionment Act, 1870 (c. 35), did not affect the bequest so as to entitle the tenant to be forgiven the rent down to the day of testator's death.—*Re LUCAS, PARISH v. During a current quarter, some dispute arising between the parties, B. told A. that she would quit immediately. The latter answered, she might go when she pleased. B. quitted, & A. accepted possession of the apartments:—Held: A. could neither recover the rent, which, by virtue of the original contract, would have become due at the expiration of the current quarter; nor rent pro rata, for the actual occupation of the premises for any period short of the quarter.—GRIMMAN v. LEGGE (1828), 8 B. & C. 324; 2 Man. & Ry. K. B. 438; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 321; 108 E. R. 1063.

D. On Assignment or Sub-letting.

4051. On assignment of whole—Whether rent apportioned.]—An action of covenant lies against the assignee of a lessee of an estate for a part of the rent, as in such case the action is brought on a real contract in respect of the land, & not on a personal contract. & in case of eviction the rent may be apportioned, as in debt or replevin. Aliter in covenant against the lessee himself who is liable on his personal contract.

After paying the stipulated rent for more than a year, he let off a portion of each parcel to A. & B. separately, & continued to hold the residue. SUB-SECT. 3.—SEVERANCE OF RENT.

A. In General.

4060. Whether binding on lessee.]—Rent may be apportioned by the act of the lessor & the assent of the lessee.

One seised of lands in fee, & also of lands held by copy of court roll in fee, made one entire demise of the lands for years, rendering one entire rent. Afterwards the lessor surrendered the copyhold land to the use of C. & his heirs, & at another time granted the reversion of the freehold lands to C. in fee, & the lessee attorned. Afterwards, the rent being in arrear, C. brought an action of debt for the whole rent:—Held: he might well do so, although he comes to the reversion by several conveyances & at several times.—COLLINS & HARDING'S CASE (1597), 13 Co. Rep. 57; Cro. Eliz. 622; Moore, K. B. 544; 77 E. R. 1467.

A. leased both these messuages to a tenant at an entire rent of £65 10s. for a term of years, & during the continuance of that term, contracted to sell the reversion of one of the messuages to C. In the contract the messuage was described on lease, together with another, & that the apportioned rent in respect of it was £40. A. & B. afterwards conveyed the reversion of both houses, & the entire rent of £65 10s. unto D. to certain uses, viz., as to the said messuage which A. had contracted to sell, & the yearly rent of £40, together with all powers & remedies reserved for recovering the rent of £65 10s. to such uses as A. should appoint; & as to the other messuage & the residue of the entire rent to the use of A. in fee. A. afterwards appointed the messuage which he had contracted to sell, & the apportioned rent to the vendee:—Held: the latter did not acquire the same rights & remedies against the lessee as he would have acquired if the rent had been legally apportioned by a jury, the lessee for the

The tenant of a farm underlet it to deft. on a yearly tenancy. He subsequently gave deft. notice to quit. During the currency of the notice he, by a parol arrangement with the owner of the farm & pltf., surrendered his reversion to the owner, who thereupon & as part of the same transaction granted to pltf. by parol a new tenancy from year to year to commence immediately & to run concurrently with, but subject to, the unexpired portion of deft.'s term. 4156. ——— Void charitable uses—Grantee acquiring title by lapse of time.]—On Mar. 10, 1747, a lease by deed of one acre of land for one hundred & fifty years, from Mar. 25, 1747, at a rent of 1s. a year, if demanded, was granted to persons in a parish in trust, that the lessees & the survivors or survivor, his exors., administrators, & assigns, might build & continue a workhouse upon the land for the better reception & employment, & for the lodging & entertainment only of all the poor people of the parish, & not to be let, mortgaged for money, or assigned to any other use, interest, or purpose whatever. If the inhabitants should discontinue the prescribed use of the building so to be erected, & should be willing to deliver it to the landlord, it should be lawful for them to do so, he paying the then value of the building. The deed was not enrolled. The last payment of rent was in 1776. In 1862 the property was sold to defts. by the parish officers as freehold. On action by the reversioner to recover 1s. rent:—Held: the lease was for charitable purposes, & failed to comply with the Mortmain Act, 1736 (c. 36), & was not saved from the effects of that statute by Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844 (c. 101), s. 73. The lease was therefore void ab initio, & Stat. Limitations began to run against the grantor, if not from the time of the execution of the lease, at any rate from the time when rent ceased to be paid.—WEBSTER v. SOUTHEY (1887), 36 Ch. D. 9; 56 L. J. Ch. 785; 56 L. T. 879; 52 J. P. 36; 35 W. R. 622; 3 T. L. R. 628.

4157. ——— Failure to plead statute—Subsequent action on same agreement—Res judicata.]—Pltf. brought an action in the county ct. to recover rent due under an agreement for a lease. Deft. set up the defence that there had been no concluded agreement, but the ct. entered judgment for pltf. Further rent having become due pltf. brought a second action in the county ct. Deft. gave notice of the special defence that there was no memorandum or note of the agreement sufficient to satisfy Stat. Frauds, s. 4. The county ct. judge was of opinion that the matter was res judicata & gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: as deft. might have set up the defence of the Stat. Frauds in the first action, & had omitted to do so, he was not entitled to reply upon it in the subsequent action, & the decision of the county ct. judge was therefore right.—*HUMPHRIES v. In a subsequent action in the county ct. between the same parties for further rent under the same agreement, deft. raised the defence that there was no consideration for the agreement:—Held: deft. having admitted in the first action that rent was due from her under the agreement was estopped from raising in the second action the defence of no consideration for the agreement.—*COOKE v. 4162. Promise under duress—Consideration of withdrawing distress.]—An agreement is not void because made under the influence of duress of goods.

Pltf. had distrained for £19 10s. due. Deft. signed an agreement, by which, in consideration of pltf. withdrawing the distress, he agreed immediately to pay £3 7s. 6d. in part payment, & the balance within a month; in default of which, pltf. to be at liberty to levy a distress, or take any other steps for the recovery of the same. Deft. being sued on this agreement, sought to avoid it on two grounds: that the distress was wrongfully made for £19 10s., the smaller sum of £3 7s. 6d. only being due, & that deft. entered into the agreement to prevent the sale of his goods; & that there was no consideration for the agreement, except in respect of £3 7s. 6d.:—Held: neither of these grounds of defence was an answer to the action.—SKEATE v. BEALE (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 983; 3 Per. & Dav. 597; 9 L. J. Q. B. 233; 4 Jur. 766; 113 E. R. 688

4163. Judgment by default in previous action—Defendant not estopped.]—Deft., by allowing judgment to go against him by default in an action to which he has a good defence, is not estopped from pleading such defence in a subsequent action against him by the same pltf., if such defence be not inconsistent with any traversable averment in the declaration in the former action. Therefore where, in the first action, in which judgment by default was so obtained, the declaration was for non-payment of rent which had accrued due under an agreement to grant a lease, & pltf., in a subsequent action, sued the same deft. for further rent under the same agreement, deft. was held not to be estopped from pleading in such last action that a yearly tenancy had, by agreement between the parties, been substituted for deft.'s interest under the agreement declared on, & that such yearly tenancy had been duly put an end to before the accruing of pltf.'s cause of action.—HOWLETT v. TARTE (1861), 10 C. B. N. S. 813; 31 L. J. C. P. 146; 9 W. R. 868; 142 E. R. 673.

FLETCHER (1877), 37 L. T. 100; 41 J. P. 759.

4165. —Proportion of license duty deducted from rent—Proportion to be determined before action.]—The rent of certain licensed premises being in arrear, the landlord commenced an action under Ord. 14 to recover possession & money due. The lessee admitted the arrears of rent, but said that he was entitled under Finance Act, 1922 (c. 8), s. 2, to deduct from the rent the proportion payable by the landlord of the excess license duty he had paid, which amounted to more than the rent due:—Held: deft. had a right to have the proportion of the increase in duty payable by the landlord determined before the landlord was entitled to proceed with his action.—LEWIS v. 4167. Surrender of part of premises—By assignee—Liability of lessee not extinguished.]—(1) Pltf. demised premises to deft. for a term of years by deed containing a covenant by deft. for the payment of the rent reserved. Deft. assigned the term, & his assignee surrendered a portion of the premises to pltf. In an action on the covenant pltf. claimed to recover the amount of the apportioned rent for the part of the premises not surrendered:—Held: the liability of deft. on the covenant was not extinguished by the surrender of part of the demised premises, but he still remained liable thereon, at any rate to the amount claimed.

Qu.: whether he remained liable to the extent of the whole of the rent originally reserved.

(2) Then it is said that there has been what is equivalent to an eviction from part of the premises. What has really happened is that, the lessee having assigned his lease to an assignee, to whom by so doing he has given authority to surrender in the sense that he cannot object to his so doing, such assignee has surrendered part of the premises to the landlord. How in any sense can that be said to amount to an eviction by the lessor, a term which implies for this purpose something wrongfully done by the lessor against the will of the lessee (LORD JESHER, M.R.).—BAYNTON v. 4169. Damages in addition to arrears—Whether proof of title to reversion necessary.]—In an action of covenant for non-payment of ten half-years' arrears of rent, there being no traverse of pltf.'s reversion, it is not necessary to give evidence of the time at which pltf. became entitled to the reversion in order to recover more than nominal damages.—MACKENZIE v. PHILLIPS (1845), 6 L. T. O. S. 120.

4170. Interest on arrears—Not recoverable.]—Interest on arrears of rent & an apportionment, as between landlord & tenant, disallowed.—PEERS v. SNEYD (1853), 17 Beav. 151; 51 E. R. 990.

4171. — Money paid into court—Abuse of process of court.]—Rent was due from the N. E. co. to the H. & S. co. & the lessee co. gave the lessor co. notice that the money would be paid into ct., where upon the lessor co. gave the lessee co. notice that unless the amount were paid interest would be claimed, under Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28. The money was paid into ct., & the lessor co. presented a petition for its payment out, & that the lessee co. should pay interest thereupon:—Held: the lessor co. were entitled to interest on the amount paid into ct., as such payment, which was an abuse of the process of the ct., had defeated their right to interest under the statute, sect. 28 giving a title to interest in respect of a debt for which an action is brought.—HULL & SELBY RY. Co. v. NORTH EASTERN RY. Co. (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 872; 24 L. J. Ch. 109; 24 L. T. O. S. 164; 3 W. R. 129; 43 E. R. 1109, L. J.J.

4184. — By assignee—Must show accrual after assignment.]—A declaration in covenant for rent set out an indenture of the year 1820, by which, after the recital of a mtge. deed of 1818, containing an assignment by Y. of certain premises to S. for the residue of a term of five thousand years, subject to redemption on payment by Y. to S. of £1,200, with interest, demised the premises to L. for a term at the request of Y, he, L., covenanting for himself, his assigns, etc., to pay the rent during the term demised, & the continuance of the recited mtge. to S., & after payment & satisfaction of the mtge. to Y., his exors., etc. It was then stated that in 1821 S. assigned to G., subject to L.'s lease; & that G. assigned one moiety to pltf. on Dec. 15, 1843, & the other on Feb. 18, 1835; that L.'s term became vested in debt., & that after debt. became possessed of the residue of such term on Mar. 25, 1844, two years' rent became in arrear to pltf. Plea, that before the rent became due S. was paid & satisfied the principal & interest due on the mtge. out of moneys arising from the sale of part of the premises; & that S. by indenture acknowledged the payment out of such moneys, & released Y. from all claims, etc.:—Held: (1) the covenant in the declaration to pay Y., etc., until payment & satisfaction of the mtge. ran with the land, & did not become a covenant in gross till the happening of the event; (2) the payment of the mtge. money was a condition in defeasance, which ought to have been pleaded by debt.; (3) it sufficiently appeared in the declaration that the rent became due after the assignments to pltf., because on demurrer the dates of the assignments must be taken to be true, & on Mar. 25, 1844, pltf. was entitled to half a year's entire rent, & a moiety of the other year & a half year's rent; & that the ct. below having power to assess the damages, the declaration was good.—*WHITAKER v. B. Entry and Occupation.

(a) In General.

See Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (c. 19), s. 14.

4189. General rule.—(1) In an action for the use & occupation of a house for six months it is prima facie sufficient for pltf. to show an occupation of the house by deft., as his tenant for the preceding six months, since the continuance of the tenancy is to be presumed until the contrary appear.

(2) It is not sufficient in such case for deft. to prove that the keys had been previously delivered to a servant at pltf.'s house, & a subsequent declaration on the part of pltf. that the keys had been lost or mislaid.—HARLAND v. BROMLEY (1816), 1 Stark. 455, N. P.

4190. Beneficial occupation.—The lessee of a house underlet the same at Lady Day to A., as tenant from year to year, & before the end of the half year, put workmen into the house with A.'s consent, for the purpose of repairing a party wall, but the inconvenience occasioned thereby was so great that A.'s lodgers quitted the house, & he was obliged to take lodgings for his own family elsewhere, & after paying the rent up to Midsummer Day, he remained in possession carrying on his trade till July 5, & then quitted, without notice to his landlord:—Held: the latter could not maintain an action for use & occupation for the second half year which had thus commenced, the jury finding that there had been no beneficial occupation.—EDWARDS v. HETHERINGTON (OR ETHERINGTON) (1825), 7 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 117; Ry. & M. 268.

4191. ———.—Declaration alleged that pltf. agreed to grant & let, & deft. to take, a messuage, with exclusive licence to shoot & sport over a manor, & to fish in the waters thereof during the term, to hold the messuage, right, liberties, & premises, for the term, at a rent; that pltf. let the messuage, right, liberties, & premises to deft., who entered into & upon the same, & became & was possessed thereof for the term: breach, non-payment of rent. Plea, that the messuage was small, & taken by deft. solely for the enjoyment of the right over the manor, which was extensive; & that the agreement was not sealed by either party. Verification. On special demurrer, for that the plea amounted to the general issue:—Held: deft. was entitled to judgment; & the demise being partly of an incorporeal hereditament, & not under seal, no rent could be recovered on such demise; & the declaration could not be treated as a claim of compensation for use actually had of the subject of demise, since it alleged only his entry & possession, & not an occupation.—BIRD v. HIGGINSON (1835), 2 Ad. & El. 696; 1 Har. & W. 61; 4 Nev. & M. K. B. 505; 4 L. J. K. B. 124; 111 E. R. 267; on appeal (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 824, Ex. Ch.

4192. Actual or constructive.—By an instrument in writing B. agreed to grant, seal, & execute to D. a legal & effectual lease of premises for a term of years, at a certain annual rent, & subject to covenants by D., to pay the rent & taxes, to keep the premises in repair & to paint them every third year, & leave them in good repair at the end of the term; & D. agreed to accept the lease upon the above terms & in the meantime, & until such lease should be made & executed, to pay the rent, & to hold the premises subject to the covenants above mentioned:—Held: an action may be maintained for use & occupation, if a party hold premises under a contract or agreement, & actual occupation is not necessary.—*PINERO v. In an action for use & occupation, it appeared that A. entered & occupied the premises on Sept. 27, but there was not any evidence that B. had done so, who suffered judgment by default in the action:—Held: the jury were justified in finding that both defts., A. & B., were liable in the action.—GLEN v. DUNGEY (1849), 4 Exch. 61; 18 L. J. Ex. 359; 13 L. T. O. S. 284; 154 E. R. 1125.

4211. ———. In an action against assignee of a lease, some only of the lessees having executed the assignment, but deft. & another assignee having executed, & the other having entered:—Held: deft., on a plea in bar denying that the estate of lessees had come to him, was liable as assignee. Also, the joint assignee having entered & occupied with deft.'s privity, he was liable for use & occupation.

Occupation by a co-tenant is sufficient to sustain use & occupation (WIGHTMAN, J.).—ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH CO. v. MOORE (1861), 2 F. & F. 363 N. P.

4212. 4213. — Co-tenant holding over.]—A. let premises to four persons, B., C., D., & E., for a year certain, ending at Midsummer, 1839, with a proviso that if, a month at least before the termination of the year, a request were made to him to that effect, A. would grant them a lease for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years. The lessees were directors of a joint stock bank, & occupied the premises for the purpose of its business. B. ceased to be a director in Jan. & C. in Mar. 1839. On May 31 the solr. of the directors applied to A. to renew the tenancy for another year to the then directors; but no agreement to that effect was finally executed. On June 20, the solr. applied for a renewal of the agreement for a quarter of a year; to which pltf., on June 23, replied "that he should consider of it." Nothing further passed between the parties, but at the Michaelmas following the premises were delivered up to A.:—Held: the four original lessees were liable to A. in an action for use & occupation, for the rent of the quarter from Midsummer to Michaelmas.—*CHRISTY v. 4215. — Without consent of defendant.]—Where premises are let for a certain term to A. & B., & A. holds over after the expiration of the term, upon a special verdict, the ct. will not infer that such holding over was with B.'s assent, so as to render him liable in an action for use & occupation for such time as A. continues to hold over. If such assent is not stated in the special verdict, the ct. will award a venire de novo for the purpose of ascertaining the fact one way or the other.

4216. — A. & B. were tenants to pltf. of certain premises for a term of three years. B. never occupied the premises, but A., on the expiration of the term, held over. No assent of B. to the holding over was proved. An action for use & occupation having been brought by pltf. against A. & B., in which A. suffered judgment by default, pltf. tendered in evidence a letter written by his agent to B., after the expiration of the term, in which he demanded rent alleged to be due subsequently to the term: no answer was returned to this letter:—Held: as one tenant cannot bind his co-tenant by holding over without his assent, according to the doctrine of Christy v. Tancred, No. 4213, ante, which was in effect confirmed by the case of Tancred v. Christy, No. 4215, ante; & as there was no evidence of B.'s assent in this case, deft. B. was not liable for the rent, & therefore the letter to him, although admissible, was not entitled to much weight.—DRAPER v. CROFTS (1846), 15 M. & W. 166; 15 L. J. Ex. 92; 153 E. R. 807.

Display of board—For purpose of letting houses.—The putting up of a board for the purpose of letting houses by a person who built them & agreed to become tenant of them from a certain time, is sufficient to enable the person for whom they were erected to recover rent on a count for use & occupation. The putting up of the board is the assertion of a right of possession.—SULLIVAN v. JONES (1820), 3 C. & P. 579, N. P.

(2) In an action for use & occupation, a judgment in a former action for use & occupation between the same parties, given in favour of pltf., is evidence of deft.'s having occupied, but is not conclusive; & the jury ought to take into their consideration all the circumstances under which that judgment was obtained.—*JONES v. 4233. ———.]—The action for use & occupation is established by Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (c. 19), s. 14; & according to the words of the statute, may be maintained "where the agreement is not by deed." Some agreement seems to be implied as the foundation; though it is well established that it need not amount to a formal demise, or even be express. To hold, then, that a corp'n. is within this statute, is to hold that it may be a party to an agreement not under seal, at least for the purpose of suing on it; & it would be rather strong to deny, at the same time, that it could be a party to it for the purpose of being sued on it. LORD ELLENBOROUGH, indeed, says, in Rochester (Dean & Chapter) v. Pierce, No. 4245, post, that the action for use & occupation does not necessarily suppose any demise. "It is enough that deft. used & occupied the premises by the permission of plff.; & a corp'n., as well as an individual, may, without deed, permit a person to use & occupy premises of which they are seised." But, call it by whatever name we please, permission or demise, it clearly binds the corp'n.; the party occupying & paying rent under it acquires rights from the corp'n., becomes their tenant from year to year, & can be ejected only by the same means as would be available for an individual landlord (PATTESON, J.).—*BEVERLEY v. b. Unregistered lease—Occupation must be proved.—An unregistered lease of land under Land Transfer Act is equivalent to an agreement to lease, & it is therefore necessary in suing for rent to show that there was use & occupation or the payment of rent.—EDGEUMBE v. HAMILTON BOROUGH (MAYOR, ETC.) (1902), 21 N. Z. L. R. 599.—N.Z.

c. Occupation by insurance company—Under unsealed agreement.—A co. incorporated by warrant under Mutual Fire Insurance Act is not a "trading" co., so that in the absence of an agreement under seal a landlord cannot recover against the co. as tenant from year to year & by taking possession

d. Occupation by assignee of tenant—Assignee not accepted by landlord.—Where a tenant from year to year at a rent assigns his estate, the landlord, who has never accepted the assignee as tenant, may recover the rent from the original lessee in an action for use & occupation.—SHINE v. DILLON (1867), 15 W. R. 847.—R.

4253. Refusal to pay rent—On ground of notice to quit.]—In an action for use & occupation the only evidence to show that pltf. was landlord of the premises was, that he went to deft., who was the tenant, & said that he had bought the premises, whereupon the tenant wished him joy of the purchase, & that on pltf. sending to demand rent the tenant refused to pay because he had had notice to quit, & an action brought against him, but said he would give up the premises to pltf. at the expiration of the notice:—Held: this was evidence to go to the jury; but the judge intimated that it would be dangerous to act on such slight evidence, & that if pltf. had the legal title to the property, he ought to show that.—STEPHENS v. LYNN (1838), 8 C. & P. 389, N. P.

4254. Effect of payment into court—Admission of relation—Loss of right to dispute title.]—In an action for use & occupation, payment of money into ct. by deft. admits the contract, & therefore it is not open to him to contend that pltf. is without title, or that another co-pltf. should have joined in the action, although these facts may appear doubtful on pltf.'s own evidence.—*DOLBY v. It was admitted that deft. was in possession of the lands out of which the rent issued, but they were not identified, & no evidence was given of their extent or value. Deft. would not produce his deeds:—Held: there was evidence on which a jury might find for pltf. on a count for use & occupation.—HAIRDON v. HESKETH (1850), 4 H. & N. 175; 32 L. T. O. S. 258; 7 W. R. 186; 157 E. R. 804.

(c) Tenant Holding over.

See Distress for Rent Act, 1737 (c. 19), s. 14.

4257. General rule.]—A tenant holding over after notice to quit is liable to an action for use & occupation only for the period of time during which he continues in possession (PARKER, J.).—JENNER v. CLEGG (1832), 1 Mood. & R. 213. Annotations:—Reid. Hurley v. Hanrahan (1867), 15 W. R. 990. Mentd. Williams v. Stiven (1846), 9 Q. B. 14.

4258. ———.]—Notice to quit was given, & it expired at Lady Day, 1840; the tenant held on till Lady Day, 1841, but since the former period there had been no payment of rent, nor any other overt act to show that a new tenancy was created. The landlord distrained for rent due at Lady Day, 1841:—Held: the distress was not justifiable; the landlord ought to have sued for use & occupation.—ALFORD v. VICKERY (1842), Car. & M. 280; subsequent proceedings (1844), 2 L. T. O. S. 420.
